"O Goddess! sing the wrath of Peleus's son Achilles; song the deadly wrath that brought show Bryant's simple strength, must, with exswept To Hades many a valiant soul, and gave Their limbs a prey to dogs and birds of air For so had Jove appointed,—from the time When the two chiefs, Atrides, king of mer And great Achilles, parted first as foce," And Lord Derby thus: LORD DERBY'S VERSION.

"Of Peleus's son, Achilles, sing, O Muse, The vengeance deep and deadly; whence to Greece Unnumbered ills arose; which many a soul f mighty warriors to the viewless shade Intimely sent; they on the battle plain Untimely sent; they on the battle plain Unitaried lay, a prey to ravening dogs,
And carrion birds; but so had Jove decreed,
From that sad day when first in wordy war,
The mighty Agamemnon, King of men,
Confronted stood by Peleus's godlike son."
We next cite (because we suspect the reader will look for it) the famous description of the First, Mr. Bryant:

"So, high in hope, they sat the whole night through
In warlike lines, and many watch-fires bore
The dreadful wgis with its shaggy brim
Bordered with Terror—there was Strife, and the shall not forget that the proper there blazed.

As when in heaven the stars look brightly Was Fortitude, and there was fierce Pur-Round the clear-shining moon, while not a And there the Gorgon's head, a ghastly breeze Stirs in the depths of air, and all the stars Are seen, and gladness fills the shepherd's heart, So many fires in sight of Hium blazed, And eddying Xanthus: on the plain there A thousand; fifty warriors by each fire Champing their oats and their white barley— And waited for the golden morn to rise." Mr. Bryant omits the lines we are going to italicise in Mr. Tennyson's translation, for the reason (stated in his preface) that they are regarded by the best critics as not properly besome interpolator from another simile in the
