Our overcrowded jails and penitentiaries and that he should be pig-headed and obstinate in almshouses, with all the demoralization which any matter, or that he should desire in this is consequent upon their condition, are a standing protest against the delays under which this cratic city which, as it lies just across the river community has now suffered, for years. enure train down a precipice of fifty feet. The train 'consisted of an engine, tender, one freight car, one express and four passenger cars. The latter contained about one hundred passengers, seven of whom were killed and about thirty injured in various ways. The train was just ahead of a long excursion train with about 1,000 passengers from the North on their way to New Orleans to attend the Madi Gras festivals. Forth, nately, the latter stopped in time to save it from destruction. The mail train would not have gone ahead had not the excursion train been detained some twenty minutes at Humboldt. This little delay saved regiment of lives, probably. The wounded the accident have been brought to this city, and surgeons are arriving from the surroundeverything in their nower to make them as killed and wounded will be telegraphed this afternoon. Mr. Storky's Story.—"My wife called at the Times office about 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon, and we started for my residence in Wabash avenue. When near Peck court I saw a man and woman go around the corner and approach a carriage which was standing in front of a house, two or three doors from mine. When opposite the carriage, a man whom I suppose is Mr. Henderson, stepped up in front of me and said. Is this Mr. Storey?" I replied, 'Yes, sir.' He then stepped back, and a woman approached, with a small whip in her hand; she struck me, I think, on the shoulders; I did not feel the blow, as I had my overcoat on. I concluded that it was for the same end, but the rank of Paul enabled him to engineer the matter through; but it must be admitted that all the Irish bishops assisted him.

It has been stated that Archbishop McHale, to the epistles of St. Paul, let them be anothema, according to the Bull. They must choose very soon between the "Head Centre" of Heaven and the "C. O. I. R." The Pope and Napoleon

The Pope and Napoleon.

The Times has reason to believe that there have been of late frequent communications between the Court of the Tuileries and that of the Vatican, far from favorable to Papal pretensions. The Papal Government has been clearly informed that, whatever reverence France may feel for the spiritual authority of the Holy See, she cannot, as a constitutional country, entertain any sympathy with the narrow system of absolutism upon which the temporal power is conducted. The Pope is strongly urged to go back to his own schemes of 1847, which announced the secularization of the Administration, municipal institutions, popular representation in a Consulta, Council or Chamber, a free Press, and the establishment of a civil guard. It has been further signified to his Holiness, that, in volunteering these suggestions, the Imperial volunteering these suggestions, the Imperial Government does not in the least intend to make the continuance of the French troops in the Roman States conditional upon the Pope's compliance with its friendly advice, as the recall of those troops is with the Emperor's lovernment a settled purpose.
