of course strictly reliable French writer on domestic animals, of which (or of whom) he was passionately fond, had among other pets, a paniel of extraordinary character. His name was Zamore. He was neither stylish in form r handsome in color; but he was a dog of very marked characteristics, many eccentrici ties, and much artistic taste. He had no faith n women, refusing to follow them, or in any way to recognize them. In fact, the only pe son for whom he seemed to have any specia affection was Gautier's father, whom he fol owed, step by step, wherever he went, but al ways in the most demure manner, keeping close to the old gent's heels, and never stoppi

One day, as Zamore was lying at his mas ter's feet, he was aroused by music in th street; and on going to the window, saw a band of trained dogs dancing on their hind legs to the sound of music. Zamore was immediately seized with an irresistible desire to be among them; and at once rushed to the street, and mingling with the dancing dogs, endeavored awkwardly to imitate their motions; but only got cut by the showman's whip, and driven ignominiously back into the house. From that hour the dog's peace mind, and even his appetite, forsook him. Af ter a while a strange noise was heard in the ighttime, in the room where Zamore usually

As far as I can recoilect, through the dizzy whirl of thought that distracts me, we went on board the Oneida yesterday forenoon, with the United States Minister, Mr. De Long, and his private secretary, Mr. Farington, and spent a very pleasant hour or two with the officers. All the ship's complement, high and low, shoulder-straps and tarpaulins, were in a breezy good humor, for after a long and tiresome absence upon a foreign station and among barbarous peoples, they were about to steam away for their home on the other side of the globe. There was such a spring to their step, as they walked the deck, and such a hearty ring to their voices, and such a hearty ring to their voices, and such a happy light in their eyes, that we half wished we were going with them.
