After a conference with the Imperial Commissioners, it had been agreed that the allied armies abond be quactered within a few miles of Tung-chow, while the ambestadors with a large escort proceeded to Pekin. Mr. (now Sir Harry) Parkes and Mr. Loch were sent on before the army to make a few final arrangements. They were accompanied by Mr. Doe Normann and Mr. Bowlby, the Times' correspondent, and were protected by a military escort under the command of Lieut. Anderson. "It was a lovely cod morning," writes Mr. Loch, "and we set forth in high spirits, for we thought we saw the prospect of an early and successful termination to the war." Their expectations were quickly disappointed, and the messengers made prisoners by Chinese treachery.
