THE DECISION IN THE LEGAL TEN. DER CASE.

The contin ued and rapid decline in the premium on gold is having the effect of reducing the importance of the decision of the deavoring to present the question as one of political and national importance that may seriously affect the public welfare in some future, and, at present, unknown national contingency. In this view we are glad to see so much of concurrence in the press, and trust that others may continue to discuss the subject in its various bearings until a final decision may be had mpon it by a full Court. It is well, too, that in deciding any case that may hereafter come up on the docket, the Court may feel that the effect of their decision may not be of very great pecuniary consequence to the parties to the suit. Under these circumstances the questions presented will be more of an abstract character, and will consist of the inquiries whether Congress has the power, ander the Constitution, to make anything other than gold and silver a legal tender in payment of debts, and whether the question is one for the decision of the legislative power. or comes within the province of the judicial department to consider at all. The Constitution onfers upon Congress the right to declare war proper to carry into effect those that are exgress was obliged to provide the means necessary to taise, equip and support large armies. They had at the time an army of half a million of more, and the public funds were exhausted, and the obligation rested upon them to supply what was needed. In this emergency Mr. Chase, as Secretary of the Treasury, called ossible, and the only thing to be done was to issue the notes of the Government. He esitated about giving them the quality of legal tender, but argued that that was necessary also. Congress responded to his patriotic appeal, authorized the issuing of the notes, and and greatest trial. provided that they should be a tender for all debts, public and private, with the special exception of Custom House duties and interest make the notes a tender. The country was in | there was no confusion or hurry, but a calm, | tion bill." will fall together. measure was a necessary one, and they adopted | could be accommodated in the boats. The

and that suits involving the constitu-tionality of the law were brought in fourteen of the loyal States, and decided by the highest courts of all those States in favor of the law; and, also, in the disloyal State of Kentucky (this case of Hepburn vs. Griswold), which, very consistently, decided such thing? If they had, they would have said by this neglect, we cannot fail to punish with so, and expressly denied to Congress, as they did severity those who made such a tragedy to the States, the power to make anything but possible. gold and silver a tender. They didn't do it, and lidn't mean to. We desire also to say a word on another point. In the case of Bronson vs. Rodes, quietly through the Senate, within the past Amberg, they decided that where a bond or obligation week, and to a third reading in the House, Toussain provided expressly for the payment in which certainly needs a closer scrutiny than it coin it must be so paid. But the law of 1862 says the notes shall be a tender for all debts, says the notes shall be a tender for all debts, and the decision annuls the law in this respect. Now we submit that the law is just as constitu-tional in one particular as in another. The power to do this thing—to make anything a tender—is within the sovereignty of the nation, tender—is within the sovereignty of the nation, ducing the importance of the decision of the Supreme Court on this subject in its imme-diate bearing on the relations of debtor and ereditor at the present day. But in the views we have presented in relation to it, we have not been writing in the interest of either class, debtor or creditor, but rather have been en-deavoring to present the question as one of po-

We cannot think the framers of the Government intended anything so suicidal as this. It is verv certain that if the case of Bronson vs. Rodes is to remain the law, future obligations will be drawn in a way to get the advantage of it. Lawyers and conveyancers pride themselves in the efficacy of their work, and bonds and notes will be written and printed, payable in gold or silver coin, so as to remove them from the reach of any and every earthly power. But let it be understood that the nation does not lose its sovereignty-that all and every means within its limits are within its reach, to be used for the public safety-which is the supreme in express terms; and it also says that besides | law, according to the sense of the necessity the powers expressly conferred Congress may or emergency at the time, in the also exercise such powers as are necessary and judgment of the men living; and we may hand down our Government, them into conjunction, they throw much light pressly granted. In 1862 the Government was as we received it, unimpaired and unmutilated, pressly granted. In 1802 the Government was to those who are to come after us. There are say the least, in the management of the cormidable rebellion, and for this purpose Con- two cases, as we learn, now on the docket of the Supreme Court, involving the constitutionality of the legal tender act, and one of them covers the case of an obligation to pay in | State Treasury. Taking these two bills, apparently so diverse in their nature and operation, and bringing upon each other, and develop a possibility, to annual tax upon dividends may be escaped, of course, to the very serious detriment of the enactment of these two laws. The House appears to have been puzzled by the ambiguity and peculiar phraseology of the bill, and to have paused upon its final passage, until the official opinion of the Auditor-General as to its effect upon the State revenues can be obtained. It would be well if the Legislature would so arrange its business as that if, after careful examination by the Audicorporations of the State, this "capitalization ----- the rate on call ranged from four to six per cont., the latter being rather exceptional. The Government dealers are offered more than they can use at four per cent. The banks nominally ask six per cent, on pleign of sick collaterals, but in many instances are suspected of taking five per cont. When they can place large amounts on prime securities they are not unwilling to take four per cent. on demand loans. Commercial paper is more freely offered on the street, and rates are firmer, ranging from seven to nine per cent. for the choice grades of double names.
