For me and you! Good friends, for me and you! Such re-unions of the American armies have a most salutary effect. They revive in the hearts and minds of the people the patriotic sentiments and associations of the past. They keep bright and strong the bond of union and fellowship among the officers of the army. They exercise a powerful influence in breaking down old army feuds and jealousies, in clearing no misunderstandings, in revising erroneous judgments, in aiding the important end of securing a true history of the relations which individuals and armies bore to the great events of the Rebellion.
