I assure you, my comrades, that no man ever felt such pride as I did when ommanding such a noble army as the Army f the Potomac. [Loud cheers.]
Gen. J. D. Cox, Secretary of the Interior, ongratulate you on the success of your annual reunion. I was, for awhile, a member of the Army of the Potomac. I was sorry when I was required to leave it. I, nevertheless, got ever my sorrow when I was assigned to She man's department. It was, however, my for-tune to follow your first commander, and whatever differences of political character may have existed, I may venture to say that which every was drank in silence, and responded to dispose of. od soldier will respond to—I love that man, by General Charles Griffin, of the Fifth Army Clellan, and honor him as he deserves to be uring the bloody contest in which you were ngaged, to look down from the mountains on ou while you were in the valleys. We were the mountains and were carrying on a "The Militia," the "Secret Service," Generals ecies of bushwacking while you were engaged fierce battles. In 1862 the Kanawha division was ordered to join the Army of the otomac. We came with a doubt whether we ared to join you, and in due time we reported o General Burnside and were attached to the Ninth Corps. We marched out to South countain and Antietam, where we engaged vith the enemy on those bloody fields of strife We had but little confidence in ourselves until one day the lamented General Reno, hile looking at our division pass on a march at the little town of New Market, Va., said to ne. "How well your division marches: the They had tried their legs on the hills, and when new heard of the compliment of Gen. Reno or their marching they felt a pride in themme of the divisions at South Mountain, where ne fell: and when he died as brave and as good a soldier as ever lived was wiped of existence.
