BOILER EXPLOSIONS. BOILER EXPLOSIONS.

These lamentable accidents are still occurring, and will doubtless continue to occur; but it seems to us almost criminal whom in the majority of cases the Goroner's jury (as they did at Baltimore last Saturday, where a number were killed, and a large amount of property destroyed) decide that the "muse was a lack of water in the boiler." Now, we know this need not be the case. Although many contrivances have failed, and man proved earless and forceful, there is one appliance which we have used and tested floroughly for more than two years in use on our boiler, and find it entirely reliable. And although our engineer was averse to "having a watch set on him" at first, now says he "could rather pay for it himself than have it removed." We do not be lieve that low-water could occur in a boiler to which one of the "Reliable" low-water alarms was properly attached without the alarm being sounded. It is, so arranged as to be under the charge of the fireman or engineer, or it can be placed at a distance, in a separate apartment (in the office, if desired), which will med the argument "that such an appliance will make the person in charge of the boiler careless."

It seems as if, in view of the frequency of accidents (to say nothing of the costs of repairs), and the small-uses of the price (only $25,0, no one having a steam boilor in use would be without such a safeguard if they knew of this one.

The manufactory is at 405 N. Eighth street, this city, where the patentee and proprietor. Mr. J. D. LYNDE, makes safety and economical steam appliances a specialty. A visit to his place-will well repay any one desiring to examine the merits of the invention. It GRAND GATHERING OF THE Charles Auguste de Berlot.

The death of the celebrated violinist is announced by telegraph. M. Beriot was a native of Belgium, and studied music at Louvain, his of Belgium, and studied music at Louvain, his native place, until 1821, when, in his nineteenth year he went to Paris. There he was instructed by Viotti, Baillot, and other masters, and soon after made his appearance with Signer Paganini. His success was marked, and on his return to his native country the King granted him a pension of two thousand francs, which he enjoyed up to the Revolution of 1839. In 1835 he married Mme. Malibran, the renowed cantatrice, but he became a widower in the following September. He made a tour through Germany, and in 1842 made a tour through Germany, and in 1842 succeeded Baillot at the Conservatoire in Paris. As composer he was known chiefly by his variations, which form even yet a share of the repertory of all violinists. He wrote many concertos of considerable character, a Russian Rondo on fantasias on the "Siege of Carinth Vanda of the repertory of the results of the r Corinth," and variations on motives from "Moses."

INDIAN OUTRAGES.

Why the People of Wyoming Approve the Plegan Massacre—Details of Indian Butcheries—Horrible Muulation of the Dead—Preparations Offensive and Defensive.

South Pass, Wyoming, April 5.—As you have doubtless long since been informed, a party of hostile Indians made a raid into this have doubtless long since been informed, a party of hostile Indians made a raid into this mining district on Thursday, the 31st ult., killing six men—three midway between Atlantic and Hamilton cities, and the others in an old, dilapidated and roofless stone cabin known as St. Mary's Station, on Sweetwater, where some stage and telegraph men sustained a two-days siege against a large force of Sioux, in 1863. The roof being off except a few boughs over the fire-place, the walls nearly all down, and the door having been removed, the cabin, although built with stone, afforded but little protection except from the sun and wind to the men who met their deaths within it on Thursday last. Facing the doorway, so that it may be seen from without, is the fireplace, over which, imbedded in the chimney, are probably several pounds of bullets fired by the Indians at the men within. One of the bodies, that of Jack Maguire, was found entirely stripped of clothing, with eight arrows hrough the body, pinning it to the earth, and ten other wounds upon it, principally in the head and neck. He had been scalped, and the scalp cut into numbers of pieces, scattered near the body. The Arrapahoes do not always carry away the scalps of their victims; the Sioux always do. Of the two bodies, Engene Fosberry and A. Kellogg, found within the cabin, one was stripped and filled with arrows; the other, having been raggedly clad, remained unstripped and consequently had no arrow in it, as they seem to have been driven into the corpse for sport after the victim had been killed and robbed of clothing. Fosberry arrow in it, as they seem to have been driven into the corpse for sport after the victim had been killed and robbed of clothing. Fosberry was cut with a hatchet, making a deep and gaping wound extending from the bridge of the nose across the left side of the face to the cheekbone, so that, looking into the wound, the back portion of the eyeball was plainly visible. James H. Othic, who was killed in Smith's Gulch, was shot and scalped, and then had the pick with which he had been prospecting driven entirely through his body from the upper portion of the stomach. Five of the murdered men were buried in Atlantic City on Sunday. Othic was buried in this City on Sunday. Othic was buried in this city to-day.

Militin organizations have already been completed in Hamilton and this city, consisting of mounted and footmen, whose purpose it is to take the trail made by the Indians, and it is to take the trail made by the Indians, and follow it into the camp from whence they came; and, if they are overtaken, some of them will certainly be Piegonizid. Atlantic City will also furnish its quota of men, who are to organize this evening, and the whole force (which will number probably not more than 200 men, mounted and on foot) is expected to be on the trail to-morrow.

On Suuday General Alvord arrived here on the way to Camp Augur, and while passing through Atlantic City he saw the mutilated bodies of four of the victims of the last Indian raid, lying side by side, awaiting burial. These side by side, awaiting burial. These last swell the whole number to twenty-six, who are known to have thus met their death in these mines by Indians. Many others are missing and are supposed to have met a similar fate.

At a meeting in this city to-day some very sheridan-Baker resolutions were unanimously adopted, after which the enrollment of volunteers was commenced and carried forward in a spirited manner, and arms and horses, so far as could be found; were brought out in a manner which indicated a general will and determination to "take a hand" if there is to he any more fighting done; so as to make it more interesting, if not quite so agreeable as usual, to the next war party that comes this way—betthey Sioux, Arrapahues, or devils by any other name.

THE ROW IN THE ROMAN COUNCIL. Later and Fuller Particulars.

The following letter, from the Pall Mall Gazette, gives a fuller account of the stormy scene in the Roman Council, of which we gave a Rome, March 25.—The sitting of the Coun-

Rome, March 25.—The sitting of the Council on the 22d was more stormy than is yet generally known. The two Fathers called to order were Cardinal Schwarzenberg and Monsignor Strossmayer. The Cardinal attacked the revised scheme De Fide, and especially denounced the canons which anathematize Protestants, and which threaten them with a sternal damnation. He said that such does eternal damnation. He said that such doctrines were at variance with the spirit of the Gospel, and that both the precepts and interests of the Catholic Charch required her to address dissenters in the language of patience and charity. He declared that Protestants numbered in their communities men distinguished by sanctive illustrious by genius and talents, and sanctity, illustrious by genius and talents, and ennobled by their benefactions to humanity—men who could not be precipitated by words into hell. He spoke with derision of such an into hell. He spoke with derision of such an award of eternal torments, describing it as both profane and impudent. The time for these cursings between Catholics and Protestants was, he thanked God, now past, never to return; he and the other bishops of Germany knew better than the bishops of exclusions. many knew better than the bishops of Germany knew better than the bishops of exclusively Catholic countries what Protestants were, and what their needs. For his part, he trankly tendered them his hand, longing to begin the great work of religious conciliation, hereuse our are is an age of conciliation and because our age is an age of conciliation and nacification

It was at this point that Cardinal Schwarzenberg was interrupted by Cardinal de Angelis, who, in calling him to order, attirmed that he was not speaking to the question. Cardinal Schwarzenberg replied that he had never swerved from the question. The President-Legate angrily repeated the charge, which Cardinal Schwarzenberg, in tones still more vehement, again denied. Thus the dispute continued till Cardinal Schwarzenberg pute continued till Cardinal Schwarzenberg uttered an indignant exclamation and started out of the tribune. This incident called up Monsignor Ginouilhac, Archbishop-Designate of Lyons, who made adplomatic speech, designed to allay the excitement of the Assembly. Monsignor Strossmayer then ascended the tribune, and, amid a profound silence, delivered the most eloquent nanegyric on Protestants that gyer amid a profound silence, delivered the most eloquent panegyric on Protestants that ever fell from a Catholic bishop. His powerful voice reached every ear, and commanded the most earnest attention, while in language more impassioned than Cardinal Schwarzenberg's, he reviewed the terrible religious struggles of the Sixteenth Century. He then eulogized the Protestants of the present day, pronouncing the canons against them as simply ridiculous, and, like Cardinal Schwarzenberg, declared that Protestants must only be addeclared that Protestants must only be adiressed in terms of conciliation.

The word "conciliation" again aroused the Legates, and Cardinal Capalti now rose and called the orator to order. But Monsignor Strossmyer took not the district Strossmayer took not the slightest notice of the interruption, and continued his speech. the interruption; and continued his speech, even when the Legate renewed his injunction. The contumacy so provoked the Legate that he peremptorily ordered him to desist. Monsignor Strossmayer then, turned to the President, and cried out that he was weary of these calls to order which were only made to suppress freedom of debate; and that if the Council approved such decrees as De Fide, the whole doctrine of the Church would be perverted. He was citing the hitter complaints of Origen against Rome, when the Infallibists shouted, "Sileat! sileat! damna-

THOSE BLOOD-THIRSTY FENIANS. Intense Excitement in Hontreal...Three Thousand Volunteers to be Concen-trated There...The Government Acting in Accordance with Advices from Washington

[From the Montreal Gazetto of April 13.]

All day long yesterday intense excitement prevailed in the city, and eager crowds hung around the bulletin boards, devouring the scraps of news to be had there before purchasing the papers. The officers of the different battalions of volunteers hurried about looking up their men, although the men themselves required little looking after. The mostabsurd rumors were at times circulated, and for a short time gained public credence. In the evening the streets in the immediate vicinity of the different armories were crowded with men in uniform hurrying to the muster. The City Hall at 7.30 presented a lively scene, reminding one of the musters which took place during the excitement of 1866. The Victoria and Prince of Wales. Rifles assembled there, the other battalions, using the drill-shed. The Victorias turned out in the old style, nearly every man was in his place, and many new men were enrolled; the muster was somewhat larger than any other corps. The Prince of Wales, too, seemed to have gained new life, and the ranks were nearly filled. At the drill-shed the enthusiasm was quite as great; the Royals and Garrison Artillery both having excellent musters. After receiving their arms, the building possessing no lighting apparatus, the men were marched out [From the Montreal Gazette of April 13.]

both having excellent musters. After receiving their arms, the building possessing no lighting apparatus, the men were marched out on the Champ de Mars, where the baud of the artillery delighted the crowd, assembled on all sides. After being put through a few movements, the regiments were dismissed and the men sent home. The Grand Trunk Brigade was turned out, and a guard was furnished from that corps for the Victoria Bridge. The muster last night was throughout most creditable, and shows how thoroughly alive the volunteer movement still is in this city. The volunteers are now on active service, and will volunteers are now on active service, and will turn out each day for three hours' drill. Orders are given to the men to be in readiness to turn out at a moment's notice. It is understood that imperative orders have been issued to concentrate 3,000 volunteers from the Fifth and Sixth Military Districts at this city. Some and sixth Military Districts at time city, some of the country corps are expected in town during the day. The government is supposed to be acting in accordance with advices from Washington, and has wisely determined to give the Fenians no opportunity to say that they established a foothold, however temporary on Canadian soil.

porary, on Canadian soil. BAFTING ON THE SUSQUEHANNA. A Score of Raits Wrecked-Raissmen in Peril.

The Williamsport Bulletin says:
At an early hour yesterday (Wednesday) morning, eight timber rafts were carried over the dam and badly broken up. In floating down, some of them came in contac with the piers of the suspension and railroad bridges, and suffered further injuries. The accident, are informed, occurred in this way: A number of rafts were tied up above the dam awaiting an opportunity to pass the chute, when these eight came floating down, and instead of landing above those ahead of them, attempted to pass down and land below, to gain the first chance to pass through the chute. When they attempted to land, the men on the rafts there first, refused to allow them to sub" on them, and not being able to make the mouth of the chute, there was no alternative but to let the rafts pass over the dam, which they did nearly broad-sided. The men were all rescued by skiffs, excepting one, be-fore the suction of the dam was reached, and he was obliged to plunge into the water and swim for a short distance, before he was picked up. The rafts were all badly broken, portions of the wreck being strewn along the shore near the bridge, whilst the heavier parts floated on down the river. They were, probably, caught below. The accident was caused by the pilots being in too great a hurry to press the pilots being in too great a nurry to press forward. Those who refused to allow them to "snub" on their rafts, when the imminent danger of being wrecked was apparent, are not entirely without blame. The loss thus entailed upon the owners will be large.

More Rafts Wrecked.

About two o'clock, yesterday afternoon, a heavy double timber raft, in attempting to pass outside of the first pier of the suspension bridge, struck and swung back against the shore. In this position it laid for a few minutes, when it was struck by another double raft, which swung outward into the steam. I was too long to clear the second pier, the end striking it with great force. The jam was now complete from the second pier to the shore, and in a few minutes four more double rafts, unable to land or get out of the way, had lodged against the first, making eight in the jam. In a few minutes they were partially broken up by the immense pressure of the water and swung off the piers. Out of the entire number only one remained whole the balance were badly wrecked, two or three broken in two: others were badly twisted, and some of their timbers detached entirely. It would be necessary to raft them all over again before they could proceed any distance. The loss incurred by this mishap will amount to a considerable sum. Yesterday was a very unfortunate day for the raftsmen at this place.

DEATH OF A JAPANESE STUDENT. He is a Student at Butgers College.

The Newark Advertiser says:
Taro Kusacabe, of Achizen, Japan, who has been for some years a student at Rutgers College, New Brunswick, died yesterday of consumption, in the 22d year of his age. This young man, who was connected with noble families in Japan and authorized to wear a sword (a privilege of rank), intended graduat ing at the ensuing commencement and returning home immediately after. He was a memof the Senior Scientific Class, and stood at the head of his fellows. He was greatly es-teemed by all his associates, and gave promise of a brilliant future. Taro was recently elected a member of the Phi Beta Kappa Society, an honor only bestowed upon the most deserving, and eagerly sought after by the students. Taro Kusacabe came out with his friend, Iwoske Magai, two or three years ago, to be educated at Rutgers College. After being in this country a little while they both became sick, and Magai returned home to Japan and entirely reconstruction. entirely recovered in a few weeks. But Kusacabe, who was very persevering, would not return until he had finished his course, though urged to do so by the faculty. In the class-room he was always conspicuous for his care-fully-prepared recitations, and would have graduated high in his class. He was exceed-ingly gentlemanly and kind to every one at all times. His loss is deeply felt by his fellow-students, to whom he had endeared himself as only a student can. His death is particularly, sad as he would have so soon finished his course and returned to his own country where he was a Prince, and consequently had a high career before him. The funeral will take place to-morrow from the Second Reformed Church in New Brunswick, and will be attended by the Brunswick, and will be attended by the Faculty, students, clergymen from the city and other friends. The remains will be burled in the College Cemetery, and will probably be finally removed to his native land.

-Miss Alexandrine Tinne, the heroic young complaints of Origen against Kome, when the Infallibists shouted, "Sileat! sileat! damnamus eum!" on which the Bishops of the Opposition raised protesting shouts, while some of the Italian prelates cried, "Viva Pio Nono! Vivano i Cardinali Legati!" This tumult could not be repressed, and the Legates broke up the assembly. THE GREAT AMERICAN LETTER WRITER.

A Disciple of the New York Tribune The New York Times comments with just severity upon Mrs. Calboun, whose letters to Mrs. McFarland are published in connection with the reports of the McFarland trial. The limes says :

The more we read of this wonderful person's The more we read of this wonderful persons letters; the more we envy any contemporary which can boast of the inestimable advantage of her assistance. She, of course, tried her hardest to induce Mrs. McFarland to desert her hyphand. Her supplier lights showed hardest to induce Mrs. McFarland to desert her husband. Her superior lights showed her that it was "profanation" for her friend to live as a wife. A woman of so much discernment is the very person to write moral articles in a moral newspaper. She could instruct wives in their duties to their husbands, while her illustrious colleague, in the intervals of his dancing exercises. their husbands, while her illustrious colleague, in the intervals of his dancing exercises, taught a benighted world the sciences of political economy and farming. There is nothing surprising in seeing an agricultural nothing surprising in seeing an agricultural professor skipping about in the meadows among the young lambs. As for the lady, the string ought to be taken off her so that she may warble more freely. Verily, such a woman is a crown to her husband—who, by the way, seldom makes his appearance in these letters. Once or twice he flutters feebly across them as a "Mr. C." But when the lady writes: "Do you know who is my panacea for all my woes," it was not by any means Mr. C. she referred to. And then to think that even this superb production of nature was not Mr. C. she referred to. And then to think that even this superb production of nature was not always happy. So, alas! the letters prove. Was not Alexander himself afflicted with depression of spirits? The world, it appears, did pression of spirits? The world, it appears, did not properly appreciate Mrs. Calhoun. It will make amends for its neglect now. "I know," she writes, "there is as much in me as in Anna Dickinson." Again, "I must e'en feed myself with paving-stones, I fear." What a fate to overtake a distinguished journalist! The fare of the literary brotherhood is often supposed to be hard enough, but in these days something a little easier of digestion than a paving stone is usually procurable. It is a pretty picture of life, take it altogether. Here is a woman writing letters to her friends such as we find in stupid romances, and thinking that she is going to transform all the social relations of mankind by her disordered dreams. It would be ridiculous if we did not see the It would be ridiculous if we did not see the mischief which has actually been wrought. People who are not satisfied with the world as they find it would not see that reopic who are not satisfied with the world as they find it usually end by making it worse than it was before. No one now can think very highly even of Mrs. Calhoun, unless it be that devoted follower of Terpsichore who, it appears, spends his vacations in dancing at GEN. HOWARD'S ACCUSERS.

Their Extremely Bad Character. General O. O. Howard is fortunate in his calumniators. Years ago, it was Andrew Johnson who maligned him in long and frequent veto messages on the Freedmen's Bureau bill. Afterward, it was Gen. Gordon Granger who went spying among the sub-ordinates that he might find matter on which ordinates that he might find matter on which to ground indefinite and general abuse of the Chief of the Bureau which it will be remembered was subsequently delivered in a long report, which read very much like the effort of an amateur correspondent of a fourth-class newspaper. Now it is Fernando Wood who impeaches the honesty of his administration of the affairs of the freedmen. If the witnesses who are to the freedmen. If the witnesses who are to sustain these charges have no better standing with the public than the accusers, the prose cution will prove contemptible persecution, but there is little doubt that the result of the case, which some one has aptly termed "Mackerelville versus Havelock," will be the complete vindication of General Howard.

THE LATE TRAGEDY IN THE STREETS

MASSACRE BY A RELIGIOUS FANATIC 3[On the 5th of April we translated from a French paper, and printed in the Butnerin, a brief account of an extraordinary and frightful scene in the streets of Tunis. The following much fuller narrative is from the pen of an American residing in Tunis : Running a Muck.

Tunis, March 15, 1870.—We have recently witnessed a tragedy such as has been rarely paralleled in this age, and the consequences of which will, in various ways, be felt here for a long time. Omar Ben Ali Mawea, a native of the Diereed, or Date country, near the Desert, twentytwo years of age, and a water-carrier by trade, had pursued his calling for several years peaceably, quietly, and without manifesting any noticeable peculiarity in his manners or habits. On the 9th instant this man was seized with a sort of religious frenzy, which impelled him to maim and slay not only all the infidels who came in his path, but also all Mohammedans who were in the service of Christians.

"It is in evidence that he acted upon a preconcerted plan; for, in the morning, even while carrying water to the houses of his Christian customers, he caused his sword to be sharpened and procured a club. Concealing the sword in his dress, he commenced the attack with the club, and as this was a dangerous weapon, covered with iron, the blows he dealt with it were as fatal as if they had been given with a cutting instrument. He soon cast it aside, however, and drew his sword.

It was about 2 P. M., and near the quarter inhabited by foreigners, that he commenced his career of destruction. He entered the European quarter, and without haste or hurry, not going at any time faster than a jog-trot, he deliberately approached and cut down every person he met. Holding the scabbard in his left hand and the sword in his right, occasionally waving it over his head, he cried incessantly: "In the name of Allah and His Prophet! War to the infidels! Death to unbelievers!" As he passed along the streets he glared right and left to seek for victims, whom he approached and gave, generally, but one cut—but this was given with such strength. one cut—but his was given with such strength, and skill, and the weapon was so sharp, that the gashes were fearful. He was followed at a distance of twenty paces by a yelling crowd of Arabs, Moors, Jews and Christians, all crying out to seize him, but none venturing to approach nearer.

In passing by the American Consulate, he attacked a servant seated in the gate-way, and laid open his head. He then attempted to enter the consulate, but was seized by one of the janisaries, whom he wounded so severely in the hand that he was compelled to release him. Another servant was also wounded about the neck. The fanatic retreated into the street, and passed on.

He looked wild enough. He was about five feet nine inches in height, slight and spare, skin dark, face thin, with little or no beard, very black, brilliant eyes. His head was bare, and was shaved, except a circle of about seven inches in diameter on the crown. about seven inches in diameter on the crown, whence streamed a long lock of jet black hair. His arms were bare to the shoulders. His pace was bounding and elastic, without being rapid, and when he approached one of his victims his countenance gleamed with satisfaction, and a smile of joy illuminated his features. Cruel as were his acts, there was no cruelty in his countenance. He seemed to be performing a meritorious and pleasing duty, and to be quite unconscious of the pain he was inflicting. he was inflicting.

He was under the influence of hasheesh, an herb which produces on different temperaments the most opposite effects. Some it calms and stupefies; others it fills with visions.

of delight; others, again, are rendered mirthful; but—as in this instance—it rouses sometimes the animal and cruel passions which are latent, and then the results are rightful.

The maniac passed on from the American Consulate, and the next person he met was a boy going to school. He went up to him—tho boy, unconscious of danger, stopping to look at him—and gave the little fellow a fearful gash across the eyes. He looked an instant at the lad, and then proceeded towards a young girl, who happened to be coming out of a door, and nearly severed her head from her shoulders. He next attacked a woman, with an infant in her arms, killed the child and wounded the mother. Then turning into a crowded street, he passed through it, cutting and slashing as he went; entered me principal square, filled with people, crossed it, after wounding several persons, and selecting al-ways the most populous streets, returned to the Mahommedan quarter—where he sought refuge in the Mosque Zeitoona, the largest and most holy sanctuary in the city.

In crossing the Square several revolvers were discharged at him by Europeans, but he escaped without a wound, which, of course, increased his frenzy, as it convinced him, as it did other Mahommed ins, that he was a chosen instrument of God to punish the infidels, and that he was not to die until his mission was accomplished.

The uproar and excitement which this The uproar and excitement which this frightful incident caused throughout the city, and particularly in the European quarter is inconceivable. An infuriated crowd of Sicilians, Maltese and Greeks, who compose the lower order of the foreign population, assembled in the Square, and exciting each other with their cries, demanded the immediate death of the fountie and threatered to diate death of the fanatic, and threatened to take vengeance indiscriminately on all Mahommedans within their reach. The Mahommedan population was also stirred up, and between the two a collision seemed unavoidable, unless energetic measures were at once taken.

The consuls, in whom is vested all authority over the foreigners residing here, immediately assembled, and endeavored to tranquillize the assembled, and endeavored to tranquillize the crowd with promises that justice should be done. Two of their number, the French and American Consuls General, were deputed to call on the Bey, who resides in the country some distance from the city, and request him to come at once into town, with all, the force at his disposal. When they arrived at the palace they were told that the Bey had retired to the women's apartments, and that it was impossible to disturb him. This reply, was of course inadmissable, and the consuls insisted upon his being informed of their visit, and that it was imperatively, necessary that they upon his being informed of their visit, and that it was imperatively, necessary, that they should see him at once. In a few moments, they were admitted to his presence.

When the object of their visit was explained to him, he replied, that he was astonished beyond measure at the news they brought, that he was quite unaware of what was going out and would at once send his Ministers with all his traces into town, but that as to going his troops into town; but that as to going there himself he deemed it unadvisable, as it. would but increase the agitation and excited ment. From this position he could not be moved, and they left, after a prolonged interview, and a protest on the part of the American Consul that, having in conformity with
