Communicated for the Phila. Evening Bulletin. ERUSALEM, Saturday Evening, March 12, 1870.-I find it hard to realize that I have really reached this most sacred of all places on the surface of our ruined earth. My feeling was one of disappointment on reaching a turn n the road, yesterday morning, which gave owing, however, to the point from which we made our approach. In coming as we did, along the Jaffa road, the first object seen is the Russian convent. This is a large building outside of the city, which greatly obstructs the view, and only allows the eye to take in a portion of the city, and thus occasions the eling of which I have just spoken. But, nen, on entering the city itself, the first feelhere are only two passages in the city entitled to the name of streets. The first of these Jaffa gate. This is called Mahommedan It leads to another answering to the name of Christian street. After these you and nothing but narrow, crooked, winding lanes and alleys. They are all covered with uge, rough paving-stones, making the operation of walking over them very tiresome and disagreeable. Yet this is a trifle compared with the abounding and horrible filth that meets you everywhere. There is no sewerage or drainage of any consequence in the city. The offal and garbage sequence in the city. The offal and garbage are thrown out in these parrow lanes, and eft there to the influence of a sweltering sun. What the olfactories have to endure, therefore, may be better imagined than destate of things, before you can begin to see camped outside the walls. If I had to live in
