It would seem that the sole thing possible to those who are totally the terms of the matter in hand is to listen and believe; but your otherwise-minded folk are not content with the tame modesty of humbleness. What if the subject is over their heads, rannot they crane their necks and fook; have they not common sense to guide them; and when they are absent and white the sole is after the panel. At the least, they can look grave, and asy something about the danger of a little knowledge, and man's pride of intellect and his absolute and eternal ignorance, and the lecturer not making his meaning clear—very probably not understanding his own subject or what he wanted to say; and what becomes of received and accepted truths if such things are to be received?
