THE DEATH OF BISHOP POLK.

Some Interesting Particulars.

A correspondent of an Ohio paper writes as follows of the death of Bishop Polk, at Kenefollows of the death of Bishop Polk, at Kenesaw Mountain, during the war:

Being on along ramble from my home in Cleveland, through the States of the South, I have been sojourning for a few days in the city of Atlanta and vicinity, and having been over the battle-ground of Kenesaw Mountain, where General (Bishop) Polk met his fate, I was interested to make inquiries concerning his life as a soldier, and of his tragic death. Fortunately for my purpose, I was visiting in the home of a wealthy and highly intelligent Georgia family, where Bishops Elliott and Polk were often inmates, and from the gentleman and lady of the house, I received the information which I desired.

On the day when General Polk fell, General Joe Johnston, who was in command of the defences about Atlanta

On the day when General Polk fell, General Joe Johnston, who was in command of the defences about Atlanta, being at Kenesaw, twenty miles north of this place, during a long lull in the storm of battle, said to General Polk, that they two, with their respective staff officers, would advance to an outlook and see how the field looked. Dismounting under cover of the great of Kenesay, they staff officers, would advance to an outlook and see how the field looked. Dismounting under cover of the creat of Kenesaw, they stepped out upon a spur-of-the-hill, and with field glasses were reconnoitering the ground between the two armies, when they noticed that General Sherman, with his staff, was doing the same thing from the opposite hills. Being in fair view, they were recognized as general officers, and complimented with a shell from a battery near which General Sherman was standing. The shell struck close by General Johnston. As soon as the piece could be reloaded another shell was dropped by the first, when General Johnston said, "Bishop, we have seen all we desire; let us retire," and walked rapidly back to where the horses were left. General Polk seemed lost in thought, and instead of following General Johnston to the rear, walked to the right on the face of the hill, and received the third shell full upon his right side, carrying off his entire viscera. His right side, carrying off his entire viscera. His two staff officers sprang forward, and receiving two staff officers sprang forward, and receiving him in their arms, carried him to a conveyance by which he was taken immediately to Atlanta, where he lay in state for a time and was then taken to Augusta for burial. Having seen it so often reported during the war that since he became a soldier Bishop Polk had been guilty of using strong drink to excess, and also of using profane language, I asked my host and hostess concerning the truth of these reports. With an earnestness which brought tears to their cheeks, they both exclaimed: "No! no! O no! never, never! His Christian character was never sullied by his life as a soldier."

his life as a soldier."

At an interview between Bishop Elliott and General Polk in the parlor of my hostess, the conversation turned upon the former opposi-tion which Bishop Elliott had expressed to tion which Bishop Elliott had expressed to Bishop Polk, to his entering the army. Gen. Polk asked the Bishop if he still held that he (Polk) had erred by going into the army. Bishop Elliott said, "That depends partly on the future; if you do not prove a first-class officer, and especially if you get whipped in the end, you have committed a great mistake. That you are not a first-class commander is already apparent, and that you will eventually already apparent, and that you will eventually be whipped seems very likely, so that the two conditions of the mistake are well nigh accomplished."

Complished."

That Bishop Polk was not a successful commander is conceded by his friends; being a West Point graduate of the old school, he was not up to the dash and celerity of the style of warfare which was in vogne during the late rebellion; so that he sacrificed a good Bishop to make an indifferent soldier. But it is a relief to know that his Christian character was not sacrificed along with his office in the church, to which he was wont to express a strong desire to return as soon as he could feel justified in retiring from the army. justified in retiring from the army.

REVENGE OF AN INJURED HUSBAND.

Satisfaction Within the Law. f From the Worcester Spy I Our court record two days ago contained an announcement of the divorce of a well-known announcement of the divorce of a well-known artist of this city, decreed at his instance, for adultery of his wife with one James Whitney, who, not long ago, had some celebrity as a tenor singer and teacher of vocal music. The story of this man's baseness and its consequences, following him from city to city, shutting all good men's doors against him, and closing every avenue to honorable employment, we have mentioned before. We have ment, we have mentioned before. We have sald something also of the just and unalterable resolution, followed up with so much persistent energy by the decived husband, to protect the community against this foe to domestic purity and peace, by exposing his crime wherever he sought refuge and employment in his profession, and thus making it impossible for him to use his talents to provide opportunities for lession, and thus making it impossible for min to use his talents to provide opportunities for practising the arts of a libertine and seducer. We have mentioned this as an instance of a nunishment more terrible to the wrong-doer than death, and yet one that the injured per-son may inflict without violating the law, and son may inflict without violating the law, and which he may even reasonably believe is demanded at his hands by a proper regard for the purity of society and the safety of those whom the treacherous assassin of virtue, if not unmasked, may make the victims of his lust. The facts were, naturally enough, denied by Whitney, who, as might have been expected of such a wretch, sought to retrieve his ruined reputation by defaming the man whom he robbed of his wife, but these facts are now established after a fair trial on the spot where they occurred, and so conclusively established that the counsel who sought to dispute them had not even so much of a case as would sufthat the counsel who sought to dispute them had not even so much of a case as would suffice for the foundation of a plausible argument. The wronged husband, if we are not mistaken, will not yet abate any of the force of his settled resolve that the transgressor shall continue to feel the consequences of his crime. Penitence, confession and amendment are the only conditions on which he will relax his vigilance, and allow the repentant criminal to go in peace to find such occupation for his powers as, with his blasted reputation, may still be possible. KING OF BAVARIA.

The King of Bavaria has addressed the following autograph letter to Professor J. Huber, of the University of Munich:

My Dear Professor Huber.—The articles published by you during the last few weeks in the Augsburg Gazette on the "Papacy and the State" have deeply interested me both by the profoundness of your observations and the admirable manner in which you have handled your subject. It is always a sincere pleasure for me to see the great political and ecclesiastical questions of the day openly and, freely discussed by the representatives of German learning. I cannot therefore refrain from returning you my best thanks for your noble labors, on which my attention has been of late so firmly fixed. The McFarland Trial.

The McFarland Trial.

Counsel would make a few suggestions:
The Court has seen Mrs. McFarland kept as a mistress rather than as a wife by the prosecution. They have not proved divorce nor subsequent marriage. They were afraid to prove that. To all intents and purposes she is a mistress, and before the law she only bears the name of her paramour. The prosecution have not proved that she has, earned a doilar since she left her, husband. Therefore she must have lived on her paramour. They showed that when she lived at Indianapolis, it was at the rate of tifteen dollars a week. was at the rate of fifteen dollars a week, every cent of which came out of Richardson's pocket. There was a game of hide-and-go-seek at Woodside. Richardson and McFarland were ensconced there when it was given out that they were away.

Mr. Graham then reviewed the circumstances of the shooting, styling the Tribune office a free-love institution. There was a stranger in the office at the time of the shooting, reading a file of the Tribune, whose name is known to the employes of the office, who has not been called, because the prosecution are affaid to produce him, knowing that he would testify to the fact that Richardson drew a pistol on McFarland, but the ball of the pistook officer. The Almighty steered the adulterer to the mouth of this pistol. From the evidence adduced Richardson was shot about dusk. According to Dr. Hammond he had congestion of the brain.

Richardson was shot about dusk. According to Dr. Hammond he had congestion of the brain. Al that was needed to produce an explosion was to apply the match. Richardson was always prepared for the avenger. Why did he, on his death-bed, wrap up a pistol in a piece of flannel and give it to a friend to spirit away? The prosecution had tried to show cowardice on the part of the prisoner. This man could not quail before a man who had destroyed his wife. "Thrice armed is he who hath his quarrel just."

Counsel then reviewed the life of the prisoner at length. With regard to the plot against the prisoner, there was never a more fleudish one in existence. It has been shown that a year before she left her husband she cuckolded him. She went on the stage for that purpose. He defended the prisoner in his endeavors, by a civil suit, to recover his children. This man's son was turned into a lacquey for Richardson. He reviewed the evidence, and showed that they sent Percy away because "little pitchers have long ears." She complained because she had to cook for her husband, but did not complain when called upon to cook breakfast for Richardson.

Counsel proceeded to criticise Mrs. Calhoun's letter, and dwelt upon the passage that "Richardson was the managea for all her Counsel proceeded to criticise Mrs. Calhoun's letter, and dwelt upon the passage that "Richardson was the panacea for all her woes." He condemned her conduct in steeling and hardening Mrs. McFarland's heart against her husband. Counsel would refer to the letter containing the initials, "J. R. Y.," and commented upon it at some length. He maintained that it was the initials of a name. While counsel was speaking, an excited elderly lady cried out, "Ladies all write like that." An officer of the Court ordered one of his aids to expel the lady. He not complying, the officer came to the lady and turned her out, after a great deal of confusion.

Mr. Graham finished his argument, and the Court adjourned. The case will probably go

From the Report of Committee on Chi-nese Labor to the South Carolina Agri-cultural Convention. rese Labor to the South Carolina Agricultural Convention.

Your Committee are of the opinion that the introduction of Chinese labor would be of great benefit to a large portion of South Carolina. In the lower part of this State, and on the islands, where rice and long cotton are cultivated, and where it is supposed white labor cannot be permanently or profitably employed, it would seem to be a great acquisition. The Chinaman is reported to enjoy almost perfect health on the low river lands in the most unhealthy regions of the South and Southwest. Chinese labor is not an experiment, because in Louisiana it has been tried with great success, and very much to the satisfaction of these who have procured it. It is important, however, that this labor should be procured from the rural districts, since the labor brought from the seaport towns is likely to give satisfaction. The Chinese laborer has shown himself industrious, frugal, obedient, and attentive to the interest of his employer. He is by nature mild and pacific. His shrewdness and wonderful imitative powers enable him teadily to acquire the necessary information, and to perform with facility every kind of farm labor. We think that the Chinaman cannot be surpassed, either as servant or laborer, by any other, whether you place him in the heuse, the garden, the field, the workshop, or on the railroad. It is gratifying to be able to report on reliable information that the Chinese laborer can be brought into our State at a price within the means of most of our planters, say at an expense of not more than $125 per head, the whole or a greater our State at a price within the means of most of our planters, say at an expense of not more than $125 per head, the whole or a greater part of which would be refunded by the laborer. In one instance, when a number of Chinese laborers have recently been brought to New Orleans, the cost per head was $65, all of which the laborer contracts to refund from his first earnings. These people have contracted for five years at fifty cents per day, and all lost time to be accounted for at the same rate. They work from suncise until sunset, allowing one hour for dinner, and agree to obey, unquestioned, all orders from the owner or manager. Your committee think it is only necessary to use the same means to introduce the Chinese as is same means to introduce the Chinese, as is employed for the introduction of foreign laborers. Money and concert of action will bring them. And they are needed. A vast portion of our lands is lying waste auduncul-
