I desire to say just here, what I had not an opportunity of saying when the gentleman from New York (Mr. Cox) took his seat. We have had a great deal of criticism on the present head of the Navy Department, and on the gentleman (Mr. Borie) who assumed its administration on the 4th of March, 1869, to say nothing of the distinguished naval officer (Admiral Porter) who has been on duty there. annie, Fenton, 24 hours from New York, We have heard comparisons made between the present Secretary of the Navy and his immediate predecessor, and their course in the performance of their duties, and that of the incumbent of the office prior to the inauguration of General Grant. I do not rise here to say a word against Mr. Welles. But I want to say to the committee that the circumstances under which that gentleman conducted the Department were entirely different from the circumstances existing to-day, and which have existed for more than a year past. We were in a state of war, or just recovering from it, during nearly the whole of that gentleman's administration of the Navy Department, and Congress gave liberally for the support of the Navy and for the fitting out of its hundreds of vessels. Now, in regard to another point referred to by the gentleman from New York (Mr. Cox).
