dent's Indian policy, advanced in the Senate debate on Saturday, was that it is carried out by Quaker agents, whose selection for the work by Quaker agents, whose selection for the work was considered, by one speaker, as "an invidious distinction between the religious denominations of the country." If they have not manifested, as charged by Mr. Casserly, of California, peculiar ability in the administration of the Indian Superintendencies, the Quakers certainly have displayed honesty, a qualification very much needed in the past. The prevention of the threatened war with the Sioux, in suite of the belligerent and unthe Sioux, in spite of the belligerent and un-wise proceedings of General Sherman, is sufticient answer to the charge that Indian affairs have not been ably managed. That already assured success has saved to the country many millions of money, which would have been wasted if other than what are sometimes sneeringly called Quaker counsels had reasiled.

—In a clever paper by Rev. John Weiss, in the June number of the Standard, occurs the following amazingly transformed statement of an incident which tradition and poetry have made familiar: "When John Alden wanted Miles Standish to do a bit of courting for him, the old soldier's putples was If you want. the old soldier's advice was, If you want anything well done go do it yourself, John!" If Mr. Weiss had asked any one of a thousand men and women, far less learned than himself, for this anecdote, he would probably have got it correctly, but we cannot acquire everything without forgetting something.

A SHIP ON FIRE.

Extensive Conflagration on the East River.--Loss $150,000.

The New York Times says: At 101 o'clock last night flames were discovered on board the Black Ball packet-ship William F. Storer, Captain James Bryant, as she lay at her dock; foot of Beekman street, East River. The fire originated in some unknown manner, in the aft-hold, on the port side, among some 250 barrels of lard that had just been taken on board. Owing to the inflammable nature of this portion of her cargo, the just been taken on board. Owing to the inflammable nature of this portion of her cargo, the flames gained rapid headway, and were in heavy volumes when the firemen arrived on the scene. So much space had been gained by the element that a second alarm was given and a new force of steamers called into requisition. The Police steamboat Metropolitan, and the Fire steamboat Andrew J. Fuller, were also notified of the fire, and in due time both vessels arrived and contributed their quota of powerful streams for the effort to both vessels arrived and contributed their quota of powerful streams for the effort to quell the flames.

So rapid was the progress made by the firemen that the hold of the burning vessel soon began to fill, and the bulk of water became so great that the doomed ship began to sink at her moorings, and keel over toward the dock. By dint of hard work the fierce torrent of flame between decks was kept under control, and it seldom made its appearance in the open air, though the entire vicinity was completely darkened by the black smoke that was constantly vomited from the opened hatchway. This rendered it quite hazardous for the Fulton ferry boats to ply to and fro, and necessitated the use of extra strong lights to enable the pilots to make successful landings.

THE AMERICAN PRESS ASSOCIATION.

An Impartial View of the A.P.A. The Springfield Republican, one of the ablest and most enterprising of the Associated Press journals in New England, pays this compliment to the American Press Association:

"The new association has already lived longer than anybody expected at the start, and unquestionably has points of superiority over the monopoly which it resists, and which it would like to break down. In cable despatched patches there's no use comparing the two, and day after day the afternoon papers of the American Press Association papers of the American Press Association publish news which is not given till the next morning by those in the Associated Press, and sometimes not at all. So regular and constant has this practice become that one of the Boston papers which patronizes the Associated Press has ordered its agents in this city to telegraph to it the latest afternoonce the payer from the Archica Press and cable news from the American Press papers, which is now done regularly. The general opinion among close observers and experts is that the American Press agent in London has access to Renter's despatches, and that his powerful news monopoly is working in co-operation with the rival of the Associated Press on this side.

RITUALISM IN NEW YORK.

Whitsunday at St. Albans. The Times says:
The festival of Whitsuntide, or Pentecost was celebrated with the usual solemnities in the churches both of the Catholic and Episcopal denomination. At St. Albans there was a solemn high mass at 10\(^1\) A. M., Rev. Father Morrell acting as celebrant, and Rev. Father Noyes as deacon. The musical exercises were adaptations from Mozart, Gounod and Merbeck. There were solemn vespers at this church last evening. The congregation is attendance. last evening. The congregation in attendance at both services was large, completely filling the editice. The celebrant of the mass was habited in a beautifully embroidered cape. The altar was choicely draped and fitted up with floral offerings. After the reading of the first gospel, Father Noyes ascended the pulpit, and preached a sermon based upon the Scripture narration of the descent of the Holy Ghost upon the Appeller setting forth that this upon the Apostles, setting forth that this sending of the comforter to them was the fulfillment of the divine promise, and the organization of the Church. There was a large number of communicants at the mass. The mass was celebrated in the same manner as is usual
