[Special Despatch to the Philada. Evening Bulletin.] PRINCETON, N. J., June 28.—The exercises to-day, commenced at nine o'clock. A gymnastic exhibition was given before the speech of Secretary Robeson. The Gymnasium, which seats eight hundred persons, was crowded to its utmost extent by a brilliant audience, the largest portion of whom were ladies. The performances, under the direction of Mr. Goldie, were exceedingly interesting. About forty of the students took part in the performances; especially those on the rings and single and double trapeze excelled, probably, any other exhibition of amateur gymnastics that has ever taken place in this country. At eleven o'clock the annual oration before the literary societies was delivered, in the

First Presbyterian Church. Secretary Robeson, who had been selected as the orator of the day, delivered an exceedingly able address. His subject was "The Responsibility of Institutions of Learning. "IN THE POET'S CORNER." The Obsequies of Charles Dickens...His Final Resting-Place.

That Resting-Place.

(From the London Times.)

The wish of the people of England has prevailed, and Charles Dickens rests in the Abbey Church of St. Peter, at Westminster. Our readers will learn with surprise and satisfaction that the funeral of the great novelist was celebrated at an early hour yesterday morning, in Poet's Corner, with as much privacy as could have been secured for it in any little village church in Kent, or even in Wales or Cornwall. A grave had been dug during the night, and we believe we are right in asserting that, besides the dean and canons, hardly a member of the cathedral body on Monday evening was aware of the intended arrangement. It appears that of the intended arrangement. It appears that some days ago the dean sent a communication to the family of Mr. Dickens to the effect that, to the family of Mr. Dickens to the effect that, if it was desired by themselves or by the public that he should be buried in the Abbey, he would do all in his power to facilitate the arrangements; and, also, that on Monday, suggesting that the Abbey was the fitting resting place for such a man; he repeated the offer in terms more distinct. Most fortunately, it was found, upon opening Mr. Dickens's will, that, although his instructions were explicit in forbidding all pomp and show, and all that "mockery of woe" which undertakers are at such pains to provide, he had named no place of burial; and, therefore, his executors filt that it was open to them to concur with falt that it was open to them to concur with the national wish, if they could only insure the national wish, if they could only insure secrecy as to place and time. This was "arranged satisfactorily on Monday, and at an early hour yesterday morning the body was conveyed, almost before any one was stirring, in a hearse from Gad's Hill to one of the railway stations of the London, Chatham and Dover line, whence it was forwarded to London by a special train, which reached the Charing-cross Station punctually at 9 o'clock. In a few special train, which reached the Charing-cross Station punctually at 9.0 clock. In a few minutes more the hearse, which was plainness itself, was on its way down Whitehall, to the Abbey, followed by the mourning coaches, and we believe that not a single person of the many scores who must have met the gloomy cavalende as it clowly need along was cavalcade as it slowly paced along was aware that that hearse was conveying to its last rest-ing-place all that was mortal of Charles Dickens.

A few minutes before 3.30 the hearse and mourning coaches—the latter three in number—entered Dean's-yard, and the body was carried through the cloisters to the door of the nave, where it was met by the dean, the two canons in residence, Canon Jennings and Canon Nepeau, and three of the minor canons. The choir were not present, and indeed for the most part, were unaware that a grave had been opened in the Abbey, and that the sounds of the burial service were about to be heard there once more, more than half a year having passed by since the last funeral—that of Mr. Peabody. The service was most impressively read by the dean, all but the Lessons, which were read by the senior canon. There was no anthem, no chanted psalms, no hymn, not even an intoned response or "Amen," but the organ was played at intervals during the mournful ceremony. The earth was cast into the grave by the Clerk of the Works; the service ended, the mourners—fourteen in number, with perhaps as many more strangers who accidentally chanced to be present—gathered round the grave to take a last look at the coffin which held the great novelist's remains, and to place held the great novelist's remains, and to place wreaths of immortelles and other flowers upon the coffin-lid, and the service was at an end.

The coffin was of plain but solid oak, and it bore the plain and simple inscription:

bore the plain and simple inscription:

CHARLES DICKENS,
Born February 7, 1812.

Died June 9, 1870.

His grave, which is only between five and six feet deep, is situated about a yard, or a yard and a half, from the southern wall of Poet's Corner; the spot was selected by the Deep from among the faw, vacant, spaces, in Dean from among the few vacant spaces, in that transept, and our readers will hear, with interest that all of Charles Dickens that is mortal lies at the feet of Handel and at the head of Sheridan, with Richard Cumberland resting on his right hand and Macaulay on his left.—His grave is—near the foot of Addison's statue; and Thackeray's bust looks calmly down upon the grave of his old friend. Dr. Johnson and Garrick lie within a forward of Johnson and Garrick lie within a few yards of him; and the busts of Shakespeare, Milton and a bost of other worthies, each of them the glory of English literature in their day, are but a little further of little further off.

It will be felt no doubt by all thoughtful persons that although the executors of Charles Dickens may have disappointed the public by keeping the time and place of his funeral to keeping the time and place of his funeral to the very last so strict a secret, they have done the one thing which would have been alike acceptable to the departed, and which has satisfied the wishes of the country at large.

Mr. Dickens's two daughters his sistering law (Miss Hogarth), Charles Dickens, Mr. Wilkie Collins and Mr. John Forster were among those who followed his remains to the tomb.

The grave, by direction of the dean, was left open as long as the Abbey was open yesterday; and as the news spread about London, many visitors went to Poet's Corner during the afternoon to take a last sad look at the coffin of Charles Dickens; but it was understood that the grave would be closed during the course of last evening. We believe that it is the intention of the dean to preach a funeral sermon upon the career and character of the great writer whose ashes have been laid in the Abbey, on Sunday next.

In the first mourning coach were Mr.

In the first mourning coach were Mr. Charles Dickens, Jr., Mr. Harry Dickens, Miss Dickens, and Mrs. Charles Collins. Miss Dickens, and Mrs. Charles Collins.

In the second coach, Miss Hogarth, Mrs.

At 1 o'clock the bell of the Rochester Cathedral was tolled for the deceased. A vault had been prepared in St. Mary's Chapel, Rochester Cathedral—a beautiful chapel near the entrance to the choir, restored a few years since—for the interment of the deceased, and n vault was rapidly constructed. Yesterday a number of men were engaged in filling up the vault with earth and restoring the pavement, while the hell was tolling for the funeral.

"All the Year Round."

The following statement as to the future management of All the Year Round has be sued by Mr. Charles Dickens, Jr.:

It was my father's wish, expressed in writing only a week before his death, that I, his eldest son and latterly, his assistant editor, should succeed him in the management his eldest son, and latterly, his assistant editor, should succeed him in the management of the journal so long associated with his name. In accordance with this clearly-expressed desire, and strong in the hope inspired by so encouraging a mark of his contidence, I address myself to the fulfillment of the task which he appointed me to discharge. It is intended that the management of All the Year Round, in the future, shall be based on precisely the same principles as those on which it has, up to this time, been conducted. The same authors who have contributed to its columns in time past, will contribute to them still. The same spirit which has in the past pervaded its pages will, so far as conscientious endeavor may render it possible, pervade them still. The same earnest desire to advocate what is right and true, and to oppose what is false and unworthy, which was the guiding principle of my father's career, and which has always characterized his management of All the Year Round, will, I most earnestly hope,—continue to be apparent in every word. So much, then, being the same, it may not be presumptious in me to hope that the same readers with whom this journal, and that which preceded it, found favor for so many vears, may still care to see the familiar titlewith whom this journal, and that which preceded it, found favor for so many years, may still care to see the familiar titlepage on their table as of old. With this brief explanation of the course I propose to adopt, and omitting all reference whatever to my own personal feelings in connection with the great sorrow which has rendered this statement necessary, I leave the future journal to speak for itself. "It is better that every kind of work, honestly undertaken and discharged, should speak for itself than be spoken for." These were the words with which my father inaugurated the New Series of All the Year Roynd. I cannot surely do better than repeat them in this place.

CHARLES DICKENS, JR.

Reminiscences of the Great Author.

M. Paul Feval has published in the Gaulois some interesting recollections of Mr. Charles Dickens, with whom he was on terms of close personal friendship. Mr. Dickens had been present at the funeral of Frederick Soulie, in 1847, and afterward said to M. Feval: "I begin to love France since I saw this Englishmen are found to constitute the same of the Great of the great found afterward said to M. Feval: "I begin to love France since I saw this Englishmen are to love France since I saw this. Englishmen are to love France since I saw this. Englishmen are found to assemble around a hearse, because having never any fête they are glad to see any public ceremony whatsoever. Yet here it is not a mass, but a people who come together on such occasions. From the Rue Vendôme to Pére la Chaise, I saw but two unbroken lines of human beings in deep mourning." M. Feval also tells the following story, which he claims to have heard from M. Feether's own lips. Addressing M. Fechter, M. Feval says.

"You had carried on the direction of the Lyceum Theatre with a brilliant result; every evening your talent filled that house, which was only too small; but every theatre has the sad affliction which we call the management. I don't know how it happened, but a full-house left you with an pened, but a full-house left you with an empty cash-box. One evening you had a discussion with your manager, and he incontestably proved to you that you were some £3,000 in his debt. You had been under the impression that there was a balance of at least twice that amount on your side, but artists are in this like great lords—their men of business often trouble them with these unpleasant surprises. You went out rather angrey and not surprises. You went out rather angry and not a little embarrassed, for it was not at all to your taste to remain in this man's debt.

'How are you, Fechter, my dear fellow?'
It was the cheery voice of Dickens, as he turned the corner of Covent Garden. You told him with some amount of feeling how you were situated. Dickens expressed no compassion, but shook hands and wished you You thought it hard, but such is friendship.

Only the next morning the manager looked you up. 'The matter was not so pressing as all that, my dear Sir,' said he. 'What do you mean?' 'Why, about that £3,000. Charles Dickens came and handed me the cash on your behalf at 12 o'clock last night.'"

Dickens had for Balzac a kind of frightenediadmiration. He reproved him the behalf admiration.

Dickens had for Balzac a kind of frightened admiration. He reproached him for his excessive egotism, but he greatly preferred him to George Sand, whose style he was, as a foreigner, almost unable to appreciate: Dickensknew, however, very much of the French beliestetres. He knew by heart Gozlan's Aristide Froissard; the posthumous novels of Mery seemed to give him moments of the greatest joy. M. Feval has seen him at once laughing and crying over a page of Alphonse Daudet. It was on the suggestion of Dickens and Thackeray that M. Feval attempted to introduce into France the system of public readings which it was reserved to M. Sarcey finally to establish in that country.

THE FINE ARTS.

EASY SIGHT-SEEING FOR HOT WEATHERS.

Braun, the great photographer of Paris and Dornach, does not confine his talents to the "autotype" copies of designs by the old masters. His views of scenery are well-known, and are invariably brought home in quantity by European tourists. The best collection of them in America is at Haseltine's, No. 1125 Chestnut street, where the gallery of Braun's photographs is now on exhibition completes: The landscape subjects alone number fully eight hundred, and those of greatest importance are repeated in three or four sizes, the largest being sometimes four or five feet across. They are all taken by the indestructible carbon process. Swiss views, views in Rome, Pompeit and other parts of Italy, France, the watering places or Spas of Germany, &c., are fully represented, giving the essence of traveling without the fatigue. In a short time there are expected to arrive some particularly fine views of the ruins and scenery of Egypt, which will perhaps astonish those who are only familiar with the English studies of Firth. Most of us have never seen so many pictures together as are assembled in the close-packed gallery of Mr. Haseltine.

[For the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin.]

The Late Dr. Eckhard. In the Evening Bulletin of the 13th appeared an obituary of the late Dr. Eckhard, of Torresdale. The writer of the article having made a serious and false charge against the Superioress of the Catholic Academy at Torresdale, the friends and patrons of this Institution are anxious that a refutation of this unfounded calumny be made. To-do this, it is founded calumny be made. To do this, it is merely necessary to make a simple statement f the facts. Dr. Eckhard was notified that he would be Dr. Eckhard was notified that he would be no longer employed at the Academy of Eden Hall, after his pupils had come in a body to the Superioress, urging his removal, and expressing their determination in case he was retained to give up their music lessons. His violence of temper, his rough and unbecoming language, had long been the cause of many trying scenes with his pupils; and it was owing to the persuasive efforts of the ladies of the Seminary (who fully appreciated the Doctor's musical proficiency), that he had been retained as long as he was. So much for the assertion that "he was requested to adopt the Roman faith as a condition of his retaining his position," and condition of his retaining his position," and the "spirited profession of Profestantism" which he is said to have made in answer! No observation was on any occasion, or at any time, made to the doctor with regard to his

The present Superioress, as well as he decessor (equally "a strict Roman Catholic"), can unhesitatingly appeal to their Protestant patrons, visitors, or professional employes, as witnesses to the truth of their never intruding witnesses to the truth of their never intruding sectarian topics or opinions in their professional or social intercourse. But what better refutation of the charge that Dr. I:— was dismissed on account of his Protestant principles is needed, than the simple fact that the present Professor of Music is a Protestant, and so likewise is the Physician and the Dentist of the Institution?

All who know the present Lady Superioress, Catholics as well as Protestants, will attest to Catholics as well as Protestants, will attest to her fitness for the position, from her dignity, mildness and Christian virtues; yet one of the friends of the late Dr. Eckhard, who signs himself "J. Miller," has volunteered to address her in the following gentlemanly style: "Your conduct in the matter of causing Dr. Eckhard's displacement from a salaried position, for his refusing to sell his conscience on your demand, stamps your conduct as that of a vile and history. stamps your conduct as that of a vile and bigoted wretch, and a disgrace to an Educational In-

THE BED SEA.

Fearful Storm at Aden.

A correspondent, writing from Aden on the 22d of May, gives the following account of a storm which had just occurred there, and which, we regret to say, has resulted in the death of two British soldiers and several natives, besides a great loss of property: "We have had a terrific storm here for the last two days. At about 3 P. M. the day before yesterday a sand-squall rushed over the place, followed by a dearway a restriction of the same several forms." lowed by a downpour of rain which lasted for three hours. At 11 P. M. the storm recom-menced, ushered in with loud thunder and vivid lightning, and then the rain descended in torrents till o'clock the next morning. No such storm has occurred here since 1846. The such storm has occurred here since 1846. The report of the thunder was awful, and the lightning flashes surpassed in brilliancy anything which I have ever witnessed. Two soldiers, were struck dead by the lightning in Caup, where an immense amount of damage has been done in the bazaar and the native town. The roads, also, have been washed away in several places, and are now quite impassable to wheeled vehicles. The tanks are full to overflowing, but they have suffered considerable damage by the huge rocks which were carried into them by the rush of water from the hulls. Many natives and much cattle have been swept into the sea by the irresistible current and drowned. The number of lives lost has not yet been ascertained, but I will send you further particulars by next mail."

FRANCE AND THE POPE.

The Present Situation of Affices.

The Roman correspondent of the Allgemeine Zeitung says that the French Government has Zeitung says that the French Government has addressed a second despatch to the Vatican, as a rejoinder to Cardinal Antonelli's reply to Count Daru. The correspondent reports that in his despatch France declares that she has resolved to abstain from all further interference in the affitirs of Rome, and will henceforward confine herself to taking note of the proceedings of the Pope and Egumenical Council. The French Government, as a friendly Catholic Power, had done its duty in endeavoring to deter the Holy See from the fatal course on which it had entered. This step had proved fruitless; and, as the Holy See seems to have determined to pursue a line of action which can only end in its ruin. France will assume the part of a peaceable France will assume the part of a peaceable looker-on. On the day of the declaration of Papal infallibility, concludes the despatch, as described by the Allyemeine Leitung, the Con-cordat will cease to be valid, and the relations hitherto existing between the Church and the State will be at an end. "The State will separate itself from the Church, and the French troops will withdraw from the Papal terri tory."
