VANDALISM.

American Tourists at Dickens's Grave. The London correspondent of the New York Times says: American tourists in England sometimes succeed in attracting some slight notice. For example, the Literary World says:

example, the Intercry World says:

"A triffing incident, yet one illustrating in a characterising manner the way in which our Transatlantic cousins worship genius, came under our notice last week. A party of Americans were standing around the grave of Charles Dickens, in Westminster Abbey—a grave yet decorated with flowers. They began poking at them through the field with their weeks their prave yet decorated with nowers. They began poking at them through the rails with their umbrellas, and managed to secure a fragile and fading memorial, which will doubtless be treasured across the Atlantic."

That, I think, is rather nice; and I do not see how such a piece of impertinent vandalism could have been more delicately alluded to. The same paper says it is reported that a wealthy American has offered one hundred thousand dollars for Mr. Dickens's late resi-dence at Gad's Hill. It may be hoped that some one will buy the house and all it contains, some one will buy the house and all it contains, and keep them as a memorial. A man who has money and wants distinction could not more readily purchase it. Some friends of mine have devoutly made the two pilgrimages to Gad's Hill Place and the new grave in Westminster Abbey; and if the home of the great author, with the pretty Swiss chalet presented to him by Mr. Fechter, in which he wrote in summer, and in which he spent the last days of his life over "Edwin Droed," could be kept intact with all its memorials, and people admitted to see tone day in the week, as the houses and galleries of noblemen are shown, there would be a great multitude of pilgrims from many ands to visit it. But unless something is done in a few days, all will be scattered. This is, however, in accordance with the directions given in the will, in which all his family are carrefully provided for. carefully provided for.

THE WAR IN EUROPE.

What the Secretary of State Thinks. The Washington correspondent of the New York Tribune says: Secretary Fish had several long consultasecretary rish had several and constitutions with the President to day in reference to diplomatic changes and the threatened war in Europe. Of the former little could be learned. In reference to the latter, Secretary Fish is now of the opinion that war is inevitable. He says that there is no question in his mind but that France means war under any circumstances, but telegrams are all manipulated by Trench agents; and as proof of this he states that the foreign Ministers here are unable to obtain any despatches, and here are unable to obtain any despatches, and those they have been receiving have been very much confused. He does not give much credence to the statements in London telegrams that France will send a fleet to capture Cuba. The remark that this Government might have "something to say" is regarded as significant, coming as it does from the Secretary of State. He fears that a general European war may be in full headway before the summer is over. He cannot see now how it can be avoided. He has not received any despatches of importance on the subject from our Ministers at Paris, London or Madrid, but has sent them all telegraphic instructions to observe strict neutrality, etc. He expects important strict neutrality, etc. He expects important advices from Minister Sickles to-morrow.

The War Beginning.

The World has the following:
The sky darkens hourly in Europe. It is true that the council held yesterday at the Tuileries, which was expected to result in a formal declaration of war by France against formal declaration of war by France against Prussia, rose late in the evening without reaching that formal and formidable conclusion. Upon the strength of this fact also we have fresh rumors from Paris of such concessions made by the Prussian government as would avert the war by conceding to France its chief avowed object. These rumors are reinforced by, if indeed they did not configurate in the important statement vestermors are reinforced by, if indeed they did not originate in, the important statement yesterday made in the House of Commons by Mr. Gladstone that the British government had supported the demand made by the Duke of Gramont that Prussia should recognize the right of France to forbid any German prince the through of Sprin. This statefrom ascending the throne of Spain. This state ment gives to France the moral alliance of Great Britain; and were there any good reason to believe that the Prussian government will be content to sacrifice the pride and the conistency of the Prussian crown to the interests of Europe, we might hope for her surrender to such an alliance of the pretensions which she has so haughtily maintained in the face of the armed remonstrances of France. But w the armed remonstrances of France. But We have, unfortunately, no good reasons for such a belief or hope.

And the news that the fleets of France bave sailed to blockade the Prussian sea-coast, which comes to us to day from Washington, makes it practically certain that Prussia has determined to abandon no inch of her post-

How to Look Young-Sixteen.-Don't paint or use vile Hair Restorers, but simply apply Hagan's Magnolia Balm upon your face, neck and hands and use Lyon's Kathairon upon your hair. The Balin makes your complexion pearly, soft and natural, and you can't tell what did it. It removes freckles, tan sallowness, ring marks, moth-patches, etc.; and in place of a red, rustic face, you have the marble purity of an exquisite belle. It gives to middle age the bloom of perpetual youth. Add these effects to a splendid head of hair produced by the Kathairon, a her best in the way of adornment. Brothers will nav no spinster sisters when these articles are around.
