Sounds such as remind us of the events of 1848-9 are never out of our ears. Only last night, at an hour when the city is insually buried in slumber, I was suddenly waked out of sleep by shouts which, in former days, used to be considered the precursors of terror and confusion. There was a roar of voices in the distant streets, and, on listening, there came distinctly to the ear, in the "very dead and middle of the "very dead and middle of the desirable rooms to let" at each of the hotels in night," the refrain of that ominous chaunt which no government of France, hardly that of the old Republic of '90 itself, could hear great efforts to induce guests to patronize their the Mangion House, at Mt. The authorities seem quite to have aband doned the course which I mentioned their hat all mile for their healt and purchases. There are, of course, all the modern convening a dipted the other day of putting a stop to the statached to the establishment, including a tickk and telegraph office in the yard, and the few coquet-grounds of the other day, or rather night; and one could scarely a dozen people have found their way to a hotel built for a hundred. It was about two o'clock in the morining, in most beautiful sum-mer weather, and the scene, as the troops marched through the otherwise silent and un-occupied streets, was one of the most striking it is possible to imagine. An immense crowd, largely composed of gamin, and other regular night-bids, followed the solifers, or rather 'crowded into their ranks, and almost mixed thems when struck with them. I saw two cries and demands of the mob, the band-- This house was built with especial reference themselves up with them. The houses were hung with flags, and fes-tooned with flowers, and at the railway station tooned with flowers, and at the railway station arches were erected and patriotic inscriptions displayed. The Queen, weeping, parted from the King with repeated embraces. When his Majesty, from the platform of the car, finally saluted the crowd, the scene was indescribable; the people were freizied with enthusiasm, and the entire court, ladies and all; mingled, with the crowd, participating in its emotion, sur-rounding the old soldier, and bidding him good-bye with every demonstration of loyalty; and devotion. Ifismarck and Generals Moltke and Von Roon were present, and were repeat.
