John McIlwee, one of the registrars in West Virginia, refused to enter the name of one Alkirk on the roll books, on the ground that he was not qualified to vote under the laws of the State, he having participated in the rebellion. Judge Bond held that the case did not come within the provisions of the statute in question, as it clearly was not the intention of Congress to abolish the laws of the several States, prescribing the qualification of voters, or even to alter them, except so far as they were founded upon race, color or pre vious condition of servitude. It was plainly the duty of the registrar to inquire into the qualifications of the applicant under the laws of West Virginia, and if he found him otherwise qualified he was to register him without the vicinity of the great battle-ground upon | regard to race or color. The Judge further called attention to the fact that the act applies: to elections where representatives or delegates in Congress are voted for, and that in the case ducted by both the French and Prussian under consideration the registration made was armies in the triangular contests in the valley only preliminary, and an appeal could be had
