AFFAIRS IN FRANCE. The important news from France may b summed up in a few words. The efforts to procure peace, whether they have come from foreign powers or from the French Ministry, in the shape of direct appeals to King William, have failed completely thus far, and it is unlikely that the matter will be considered antil the Prussians enter the capital. The King possibly is induced to pursue this policy by two considerations: the occupation of Paris is necessary to the completion of his riumph, and he very evidently entertains great unwillingness to recognize the Provisional republican government, if it can be avoided. The capture of Paris having been determined npon, the result is simply a question of time-The French government will be compelled, in the emergency, to depend entirely upon its own esources, for it will receive no assistance from other powers. The negotiations with Russia, which gave them a faint hope of securing a powerful ally, seem to have failed completely and as there is no possibility of help from any other quarter, the French will have to resist with what power they have among themselves. This seems small and inefficient enough for fulfilment of the brave words that have been uttered. The force in Paris is, to be sure, of sufficient size to make capture of the city a difficult and dangerous task if the men were trained soldiers; but most of them are raw militia, badly-armed, and filled with well-founded dread of their adversaries. Some of the despatches this morning intimate that there of Louis Napoleon, late Emperor of the is even fearful demoralization among the French, will not affect troops, that their officers cannot maintain authority, and that there are panics at every fresh report of the advance of the Prussians. There is not much hope for France in such an army as this, and we wish most sincerely she might be spared by some means or other the humiliation of the defeat which must ensue if it is ation of the defeat which must ensue if it is brought face to face with the invader. The Ministry meantime proceeds with its work bravely and calmly, as it is had positive assurance of success. Not only are measures, as complete as possible, undertaken for the detence of Paris, but a loyal effort is to be made sence of Paris, but a loyal effort is to be made to establish the republic upon the firm founda- For the curious weather we have in Septemfor the purpose of choosing a National Consti- can suggest. the men who have undertaken the manage- opportunity now for gentlemen who want to ment of affairs should receive the endorsement of the people or withdraw. But we are sadly Our list of prices atraid the election will not be held at the time appointed, for it is impossible to believe that the Prussians will not hold Paris before that day and that they will not begin their administration by overthrowing the frail republican fabric erected upon the ruins of the empire. It is wise enough and honest enough for the Ministers, though, to provide in such a manner tor the possible future, and to give to the world an earnest of the sincerity of their wish to found a republic in France. Of the terms which Prussia will demand before she will withdraw her armies, nothing is | Come and Buy, Buy, Buy, Buy the Early yet known positively, but we have, reiterated.

the assertion that she will require the cession of Alsace and Lorraine, and their annexation to Germany in one shape or another. As France would undoubtedly have extended her boundary to the Rhine had she triumphed in this contest, there seems to be no great amount of injustice in the enforcement of such a scheme. But it will be better for Prussia not to push her demands so far that France will be overwhelmed with shame and disgrace in submitting to them. Bismarck declared, only a few weeks ago, that his object in the present war was to bring peace to Europe by changing the menacing attitude of France. If the latter country is crippled and dismembered and humbled now, she may not threaten Prussia for years to come; but she will cherish bitter hatred and a desire for vengeance. There will remain a continual source of irritation which, sooner or later, in this generation or the next, will prowoke another conflict. It is to be hoped that | FALL OVERCOATS, peace, when it does come, will come in such a shape that all legitimate cause for ill-feeling will gradually disappear, and the peace of Europe will not be threatened, now or in the future, by the jealous hatred of France or by her disposition to cherish her wrongs and to avenge

The Age exults over the fact that in the recent election in Wilmington, Delaware, the Democratic majority was increased in some wards, while the Republican majorities in others were reduced. The Age tries to prove from this that vast numbers of Republicans voted the Democratic ticket because they were disgusted with negro suffrage. It will be No. 1227 CHESTNUT STREET found upon examination, we think, that the whole vote was reduced, and that the Demogratic gains are attributable wholly to the fact that numbers of Republicans deliberately remained away from the polls. There is no evidence whatever that there was any defection from the party; there was only dissatisfaction with certain local measures. In the coming State election these offensive matters will not present themselves, and we believe not only hat the entire Republican vote will be polled. ____

Everything progressed finely until Wedneslay evening, when, as the multitude were at prayer near the preachers' cottage, cries of der were heard. The prayer was brought to a quick close, and the congregation repaired to the place whence they proceeded. There lay a man, stretched at full length, in his own gore. He bled profusely from a terrible gash in his left side, in the region of the heart, an-

In one instance they had insulted a young lady in attendance at the meeting, while she lingered upon the skirt of the camp-meeting ground. At another time they created a disturbance in front of a tent in which religious worship was being held. Yorick had met some members of this party in his perambulations through the woods, and had remonstrated with them for their conduct. Hard words ensued, and one of the party; Warren by name, swore that he would have Yorick's life. Yorick thought nothing of the threat until he saw Warren, much under the influence of liquor, approach him with a large carving knife. As soon as he had got up to him the man drew the knife and plunged it three times into Yorick's body, inflicting the injuries described.

The murderer was too drunk at the time of the commission of the deed to know what he was about. The sight of blood and of a dying man seemed to bring him to his senses. As
