Southey, "be made use of as an encourage-" ment to men of letters, I, for my part, should choose to remain a Ghibelline."

No, it is not for any of these purposes Aca. demies should be established and supported but for the benefit of the student artists, to show them what and how to study'; to save time for them, and also give them a chance for a few years to perfect themselves at Rome, with minds free from anxiety for daily bread. When I remember the sad fate of young Bartholomew, or when I visit the studio of a clever young artist like your townsman Harnisch, see his beautiful clay group of the Matron clipping Love's wings, look at his pale face and heavy-tired eyes, know that, during the summer months, when he should be resting, breathing fresh air, gaining newer and they may." necessity of earning his daily bread to stand in during his call some letters he received, yester a hot city studio and chip and drill and file inlustriously at the marble of a portrait statue, I use for this class of men, who, if properly aided the war. Notwithstanding the terrible war which is derastating the course of Learope, and startling the whole world by its unparalleled barbarity, the Council of the Vatican pursues its labors tranquilly. I often recall the fine reply of the Jesuit fathers coming into the Council Hall at St. Peter's: "We are working for eternity!" Most of the Council fathers seem to be Span-iards.
