General William B. Thomas.

PHILADREPHIA, Oct. 3, 1870.

The R. Sir. In glancing over Saturday's paper my over was arrested by a paragraph in your speech at Broad and Spring Garden streets, in which you propose an inquiry, in regard to a Cadetship at West Point, as follows:

No one in the district seems to know him."

Will you permit his mather to reply? and I deeply regret that your inquiry compels me, in justice to Judge Kelley, to obtrude myself on public notice.

John Boyle, who was a minister of the Metholoist Episcopal Church. When our country demanded his services for her protection, he with three of his sons, heat tated not to enlist in her defence, and while fighting for our cause he fell by a deadly stroke of the enemy at the battle of Lookout Mountain, while leading his regiment as its commanding officer.

Our son, a printer, and the subject of your inquiry, having thus acquired some military experience in the field with his father and two brothers, and conceiving a desire for a soldier's life, sought the necessary educational qualifications. In very private life myself, and wholly uninstructed how to proceed; I ventured to write very timidly to JUDGE KELLEY, a stranger to me, asking if from his standpoint he thought it wise in me, among so many more favored applicants, to make an effort to secure for my son an appointment a diur National Military Academy. I statted plainly that the only arguments to sustain his plea was the above named desire and the fact that his father's patriotism had been scaled in devotion to his country, even unto death. JUDGE KELLEY promptly replied, without further questioning, that he had aff appointment, and that my son should have it. He kept his word, Goneral, and the soldier's orynam bay is now at West Pcint.

And now, General Thomas, I have endoavored to answer your inquiry—Who is own at the soldy ya motives. His courteous, disinterested kindness was to a stranger boy, of virom he knew n

NAPOLEON IN PRUSSIA.

The Ex-Emperor Interviewed.

A correspondent and to the London Standard of September 22 the vollowing account of an interview with the Ex-Emperor:

My mind, full of gorgeous visions of an Imperial staff in every variety of brilliant uniform, quite failed to realize the idea that the quiet-looking gentleman in a plain dark morning-suit, who stood waiting for me at the top of the stars, could possibly be General Reille, the Emperor's aide-de-camp, and I accordingly followed him, with but a very slight salute, it to the ante-room of the dining-saloon where I looked vainly round for the magnificent personage with whom I expected to have to deal. Nothing, however was to be seen but a rather small room, scantily furnished with settees covered with ragged yellow slik, and opening by folding-doors into a rather large room bedond, in the centre of which stood a long, narrow table, surrounded by very plain, wooden the intervents at my bunder row table, surrounded by very plain, wooden chairs. Similing good-naturedly at my blunder, the General courteously informed himself of my business, and took in at once to the Emparor my letter and records. peror. my letter and request for the chonor of an audience. In less than three minutes he returned with a request that I would follow him, and passing through an ordinary sized room, in one of the two windows of which stood three or four gentlemen, also in plain clothes, talking in under tones while another was the stood three with the content of the content of the stood three was the content of the content geniemen, also in plain clothes, talking in under tones, while another was busy at a table covered with numerous journals, in French, German and English, the General, with the announcement, "Sa Mejeste" TEmpéreur," ushered me through a small door in a corner of the room, and I found myself not only in the presence but face to face at less than arrive. the presence, but face to face, at less than arm's length of him I came to see. As I seat myself in the chair to which I am courteously invited, and fix my eyes upon the worn but powerful face which turns to me from the small writing table, from which he has risen to receive me I feel that I am in the presence of the man on whom has hung for so many years the peace of Europe, and with the feeling the comic element which has decidedly preponderated in my experiences hitherto passed althoughther away.

If I am asked what was the predominant impression left on me by the conversation which followed. I reply unhesitatingly the strong feeling of the Emperor with respect to England. Among the first words that passed his lips were an expression of gratification at the numerous letters of condolence and sym-pathy he had received "since his misfortune" from persons who were perfect strangers to him, and there was nothing on which he seemed to dwell with so much pleas-ure as on the advance which has been made during his reign in the cordial understanding between the two countries. "When I came to Paris," he said, "there was still great remains of the old feeling;" and he dwelt with marked gratification on the change dwelt with marked gratification on the change that had since taken place. He was much interested, too, in the condition of English feeling at the present time, questioning me closely on the subject, and expressing his regret at these tone assumed by a portion of the London press. The monstrous statement of his baving misappropriated some 50,000,000 of the army votes seemed particularly galling to him. "As if," he said, "I could possibly have done such a thing, even if I had desired, it." He spoke most feelingly also of the terrible catastrophe of the Captain, expressing the strongest manufactures. ing upon-some of the details of the accident in a manner which showed fully the interest he had taken in it. The assistance given by England to his wounded soldiers had evi-dently also made a great impression upon him. Speaking of France, and of the present condition of affairs there, his tonewhich in dealing with other matters had been earnest but not uncheerful—saddened visibly, and he sighed heavily as he spoke of the state of things at Lyons and elsewhere, and of a not impossible future in store for Paris. There was not the slightest appearance of resentment in the way in which he spoke of the changes that had recently taken place, but a terrible for boding of what might come, his whole air and manner forcibly recalling to every mind the well-known lines-"Oh! my poor kingdom sick with civil blows, When that my care could scarce restrain thy when that my care count scarce restain thy riots,

What wilt thou do when riot is thy care?"

I ventured to express a hope that all might yet go well, and that before long we might see him once more at the Tuileries. He sat for some moments silent, then, with a sigh, turned again to me and said, "No one can tell—no can stall Sir what may happen now." again to me and said, "No one can tell—no one can tell, Sir, what may happen now."

Such is a brief, but, so far as it goes, thoroughly truthful account of an interview which, I am fain to confess, left on me a very deep impression. The cordiality of my own receptions. tion—a cordiality due, I am bound to say, ex-clusively to my nationality, for I had no other claim whatever—fully confirmed the more than friendly sentiments expressed toward my fellow-countrymen, and I left the little one-windowed room in which I had had my first interview with the man who, till yester-day, was one of the mightiest sovereigns of Europe, more than ever penetrated with a sense of the loss England has experienced in his fall. As I passed out, a long line of sightseers from Cassel were drawn up in front of the principal entrance, at some 20 yards distant, and at the foot of the lawn, in full view of the record I had sint suitted. of the room I had just quitted, an omnibus, gaily decorated with Prussian, Hessian and other flags, was discharging the load of new-comers to add to their number. I thought once more of the carefully-guarded privacy of which I had heard so much—and wondered.

The Ville De Paris...She Takes Her Departure Londed With Arms and Munitions of War...She is Convoyed Bown the Bay.

The N. Y. Times of this morning says:
The steamship Ville de Paris, of the Havre line, left this port yesterday afternoon, no attempt having been made to prevent her description. attempt having been made to prevent her departure. There was no excitement at the dock, though a considerable police force, under Captain Thorne, was present to preserve order. The steamship was dressed with flags, and everything about her presented a gay appearance. Her crew have been busy day and night taking in cargo, and when she left there were two sloops at the wharf, with arms on board, intended for this ship, but which will have to be sent out by the next steamer. The agents and owners made no secret of the character of her cargo, and did not expect any interference with her. Care was taken that all the passengers should have tickets, so as to avoid the scenes which attended the fleparture of the Latayette. #### FORTUNES IN OIL.

Some Figures From the Oil Regions.

The Titusville Herald says:
A rumor was in circulation on Saturday that the McCray farm had been sold for the snug little sum of one million dollars cash. We could trace the rumor to no reliable source could trace the runner to no reliable source, and conclude that it is premature, though the figures at which less valuable farms have changed hands heretofore, renders such a sale not improbable. The average daily yield of this farm during the month of August was 1,659 barrels, of which fully one thousand barrels per day belonged to the fortunate owner as royalty, on individual production. This oil, at $325 per barrel, which was about the average price in this vicinity, would not to the owner the trifling income of three thousand two hundred and fifty dollars per day, which would dred and fifty dollars per day, which would enable him to live comfortably, and even enjoy many of the luxuries of the rich. Some curious statistics have been collected which show conclusively that oil farming does pay, if baby and buckwheat farming does not. The present income of one fortunate oil prince is sefurated at early thought does not described the control of the c present income of one fortunate oil prince is estimated at seven thousand dollars per day, which would be almost five dollars per minute, which if he were a drinking man would enable him to purchase a drink of "needle gun" every other minute. Allowing one gill to the drink (which is a fair average for localities on the creek), a man with sufficient capacity could get away with a quart of tangle-leg every ifteen minutes, or one barrel, of forty-three gallons, per day. These are not imaginary rigures, but correct statistics, carefully gleaned, to show that though the production of fusil to show that though the production of fusil oil loes not exceed the consumption, yet one individual, provided he could stand the pressure, might make fearful demands upon "flyid breadstuffs," which would render the construction of more tankage imperative.

OBITUARY. A letter from Geneva, in Switzerland, brings tidings of the death at that city of Fitz Hugh Ludlow, who is very well known to all culti-vators of our lighter literature as having been one of the most vivacious and successful contributors to American periodicals. He was the son of the Rev. H. G. Ludlow, a Congregason of the Rev. H. G. Ludlow, a Congregationalist clergyman, settled for many years at Poughkeepsie, and subsequently at Oswego, where he died six or seven years ago. The first essays of young Ludlow were published about 1855, in New York newspapers. He contributed voluminously to the Evening Post, and in a more litful way to other journals. The first literary venture to which his name was attached was the "Hasheesh Eater," published about 1857. As its title indicates, he had fallen into the habit of narcotizing himself with that potent and pernicious drug, and the book is an attempt to portray poetically both the pleastrengt to portray poetically both the pleasures and the pains induced by it. As series of stories appeared soon afterwards in Harper's Mayazine. The stories were afterwards collected under the title of "Little Brother." Soon after the publication of these he took a journal of the series of the publication of these he took a journal of the series of the publication of these he took a journal of the series of the publication of the series of the serie after the publication of these he took a journey across the Plains in company with Mr. Bierstadt, the artist. The fruits of this expedition, so far as he was concerned, appeared in a series of entertaining papers in the Atlantic Monthly. Upon his return to New York he wrote in a desultory way, and mostly anonymously, for many journals and periodicals, and prepared two books. The first of these, "Across the Continent," was a collation of the magazine papers and lectures he had devised from his trip. The second, "The Opium Habit," was a recital of his experience with onium which attempted a much perience with opium, which attempted a much more scientific and less romantic treatment than he had given to hasheesh. No constitution could stand the draughts made upon it by two forms of mental and bodily dissipation so wasteful, and for some years his health has been utterly shattered, and the catastrophe which has now ended his career has been evidently imminent. His last public appearance was as a witness at the trial of MacFarland, where he was engaged in an altercation with where he was enlaged in an attendation with the prosecuting counsel.

Mr. Ludlow was married about ten years ago; but the union was not fortunate, and, after some years, his wife obtained a divorce from him, and was subsequently married to a distinguished artist. Mr. Ludlow had many fine gifts, which would have made him a deserved distinction if he had had the steadiness of character necessary to make the best of them. His death, at so early an age as 33, puts a period to a life of which the actual results are very evidently and sadly short of the promises and possibili

AWFUL DISASTER IN CHINA.

A Town Destroyed by an Earthquake... Upwards of Two Thousand Lives Lost... Dreadful Scenes of Suffering. The Roman Catholic bishop at Batang, on the confines of Thibet, China, and Burmah, sends to India a terrible account of an earth quake in that region, affecting an area of 180 by 90 miles. The event occurred on the 11th of April, and his last letter is dated the 30th. of May. Considering that the mission-aries there can communicate only by Shanghai, the transit of the letters has been rapid. Last year, it may be remembered, there was a very destructive earthquake in the, in was a very destructive earthquake in the, in one sense, adjoining British district of Cachar: A shock at five in the morning and a stronger shock at noon were followed at sunset by an earthquake which levelled the whole town and killed or bruised half the population. The missionaries escaped to their garden, and only one of their servants perished. The "large and splendid" Lamaseri, inhabited by 3,000 Lamas, fell with a crash. The Chinese official reports, which Dr. Chauveau tells us are a little exaggerated, estimate the loss of human life at 41. Lama priests, fifty-seven soldiers and 2,812 "common people." A series of earthquake shocks were felt as far as Pung-mon-tang, the place at which Mr. T. T. Cooper met Seer Suggut Sing, the Nepaulese Ambassador, in 1868. The village and many others are destroyed, and so many of the authorities and soldiers have been buried under the ruins of their houses that "robbers, like wild beasts, run everywhere." To conclude in the Bishop's own words, "the Imperial highway from Pekin to Lhassa seems, and is said to be now, totally impagiticable near Kong-dze-tin by the fall of a mountain and the sudden upheaving of a new one. one sense, adjoining British district of Cachar:

THE COAL OIL PRINCE.

He is Virtueus and Happy.

The Titusville Herald, in referring to this character, says: "Johnny Steele is now considered one of the steadiest men at the Creek. sidered one of the steadiest men at the Creek. He can do a job of teaming for less money in less time, and do it better, than any man in the business, and says he wishes the papers wouldn't 'kill' him so often, nor state that he has '$20,000 lying loose in a New York bank.' John also states that the stories of his marvelous expenditures have been greatly exaggerated; that he never had much money at one time, thanks to rescally agents and impor-tuning friends. He is now happy and correspondingly virtuous

GERMANY.

The Arrest of Dr. Jacobi, a Leading Prussian Democrat. The North German Gazette, commenting on the arrest of Dr. Jacobi, the Prussian democrat, on account of his violent speech against the dismemberment of France, says:

The government has taken a more serious view of this agitation than has formerly been the case; for, if a single Separatist sets himself in opposition to forty millions, no very great importance is attached to him. It should, however, be considered that the resolution and speech of Dr. Jacobi find their level not colly in Garnary but should the contract of the con and speech of Dr. Jacobi find their level not only in Germany but also in France, and that the newspapers there, which daily palm off on their readers such monster lies respecting Germany, would not be candid enough to say that the attitude of Dr. Jacobi excites with us merely a shrug of the shoulders. They are already making capital out of this speech and glorifying a party in Germany which propounces ing a party in Germany which pronounces against territorial compensation, thus drawing material for encouraging the masses to further resistance. Looked at from this point of view Dr. Jacobi's agitation has quite a different significance. To furnish encouragement to our nificance. To furnish encouragement to out enemies is just as wrong as to supply them with weapons for continuing the war.

Von Roon, have sharpened our sword; you, General Moltke, have guided it; and you, Count Bismarck, have for years, by political management, brought Prussia to its present elevation. Let us, then, drink to the army, to the three I have named, and every one else present, who, according to his ability, has contributed to the present success.

RAILROAD CONDUCTORS.

Third Annual Convention of the Railroad Conductors' Life Insurance Company.
This morning the third annual session of the Steam Railroad Conductors' Life Insurance Company of the United States and Canadas was opened in Concert Hall, Chestmut street, above Twelfth. The roll of membership numbers 3,298, of which number some 300 were present as delegates, each one representing some particular road. The officers of the Association are: President, James Marshall, of the New York and Harlem Railroad; Secretary and Treasurer, E. M. Livingston. The Convention was called to order by President Marshall. Rev. John Chambers being introduced, opened the session with prayer, after which his Honor Mayor Fox delivered the following address of welcome.

Address of Mayor Fox.

GENTLEMEN: It is my pleasurable duty to extend to you a hearty welcome to our city. The con inctors of steam trains occupy an exceedingly solumn and responsible position. Upon their promptitude, punctuality, and sleepless and unabating viginace and attention to duty depend the lives of thousands and hundreds of thousands of our people, who, whether in pursuit of thousands of our people, who, whether in pursuit of business or other objects, are whirled with the speed of the wind over the length and breath of the land, and I know of ne profession or public officers for in many respect and gratitude of our fellow-citizens than those who are the noble and sole commanders of the railroad trains. I min gliad to realize that you have assembled from all parts of our own country and the Ganadus, is our city—we realize it as a compliment to Philadelphia—and as the object of your Convention seems to be to adopt such measures as will not only promote the comfort of yourselves and families but make even more secure the public safety in the matter of travel, I trust that Providence will so guide and control your deliberations that the results may be a blessing to mankind. I carnestly welcome you, and feel that I am justified in asying that the people of Philadelphia join with me in this salutation most cordially.

On motion, the reading of the minutes of the last Convention was dispensed with until temorrow morning. Address of Mayor Fox.

The following letter from his Excellency, Gov. John W. Geary, was then read:

Executive Chamber, Harrisburg, Pa., Oct. 4, 1870.—
To T. Sprole Leiserring, Esq., Chairman of Committee on Invitation; My Dear Sir.—I have the honor of acknowledging the receipt of your invitation to deliver an address of welcome to our State to the Convention of "The Hailroad Conductors" Life Insurance Company of the United States and Canada," in Concert Hall, Philadelphia, on the 5th inst. Appreciating the compliment of your expressed desire for me to be present on that occasion, I truly regret that on account of an engagement elsewhere I am cumpelled to decline. I fully realize the pertinence of a welcome by the Executive to so prominent a body of men from all the States in the Union, as your Association represents, and beg of you, therefore, to present to the members of the Convention the expression of my hearty welcome to Pennsylvania, together with my regrets at not being able to be present and address them person, ally.

Sincerely hoping that you may have a pleasant and Address of the President.

My Friends of the Convention—Ladies and Gentlemen: It is exceedingly gratifying to me to be permitted to greet and to welcome so many earnest men and women, who have come hither to this beautiful city of Brotherly bove, from the shores of the Pacific, from the mountains of the North, from the plains of the South, and from the valleys of the mighty West, where empire and law sit enthroned, to participate in and witness the deliberations of the third annual convention of our fraternity. I tender you me sincerest congratulations upon the marvelous success that has attended our organization ever since it came into being, and upon the magnificent future which that success foreshadows. Here, and sacred and patriotic recollections, upon the spot where the Declaration of Independence firsts and the light, and where the American Constitution was born, let us recobsecrate ourselves for the hely mission with which this Association is charged. Let us remember that danger lurks about us overy hour we are on duty in our hazardous vocation. Let us never forget that this Associated Brotherhood has engaged to relieve the wants and distresses of the wives and children and families of those of us who shall perish or be disabled in the service to which our lives are devoted. We do even more than tids. Our sorrowing sympathies go along with our money, and they not unfrequently afford far greater consolation than all else can afford, save the consolation which comes from above.

Upon you, my brethren of the Convention, is now devoked the duty of so deliberating and acting as that your proceedings shall tend toward perfecting this drawn in a succession, which is already an unparalleled success. Let nothing turn you aside from the straight line of duty, but let everything be done that ought to be done, and all else be left undope.

I shall not occupy your time by making suggestions and recommendations, but will at once invite you to give your attention to the elaborate and carefully prepared report of our fa Address of the President.
