EFFECTON MARKET STREET OF PLACING PUBLIC BUILDINGS AT PENN SQUARE.

The influence to be exerted on Market street by a blockade at Penn Square has not been considered as much as it should have been,and would have been but for the special interest felt in Broad street.

To get a clear idea of the amount of movement of vehicles on Market street, at the intersection of Broad, a reliable person was placed, a short time since, at the corner, carefully to count the vehicles of all sorts passing Market street alone, and not including those on Broad street, during a half-hour in the afternoon. The number counted was 245, an average of eight per minute. Of course the average through the day would fall considerably short of this, but a fair estimate for the twenty-four hours would give from 6,000 to 7,000 vehicles.

Now we say without hesitation, and will prove, that the effect of putting the new public buildings would be largely to diminish this great stream of business. Let us consider a stream of vehicles coming down Market street and entering the great block of buildings, projecting between two hundred and three hundred feet each way, north and south, from Market street. Of the vehicles would be forced to turn east, and those that had an ultimate destination a little off the line of Market street to the north or south of it, would never return to Market street. It would be out of their way considerably to do so. Those having an ultimate destination south of Market would take the right hand turn, and come down some other street south of Market. Similarly on the other side. Only those vehicles that were proceeding to some point on Market street would make the experiment at all, and find their way back to that street. Exactly the same thing would take place with the pedestrians,and the diminution of the throng and business activity would take place from the very day that the foundations were commenced and the ground fairly encumbered. In a short time the aspect of Market street would be materially altered for the worse.

It is very remarkable how all streets are affected by even a trifling impediment to direct movement. Seventh street is a good example. Washington Square projects into Seventh street in such a manner as to render a small circuit necessary, about one hundred feet at each side, and, less than half the circuit proposed at Penn Square. And yet that little obstacle to direct movement has kept down that street far behind Sixth and Eighth streets. Exactly the same effect to an even greater extent is visible on Locust street above and below Washington Square. Compare it with the same portions of Walnut street and of Spruce street. Locust street is as wide as Walnut street or any such, but what a difference in prosperity and value!

The history of Seventh street and of Locust street demonstrates one very interesting fact: That when a stream of people are turned off from a street by any obstruction to direct passage, few return to that street. It is easy to apply this conclusion to the intersection of Broad and Market. The obstruction there threatened is a very large one, extending on the north side even to the next parallel thoroughfare, and therefore the effect, as seen in the examples cited, could be intensified. The effect on the two streets would be different. Pleasure travel on Broad street would be compelled to make the circuit and return, but the business travel on Market street would do so to a limited extent only. On both streets would be the same destruction of unity, of effect and of continuity. On Broad street the travel, through vexatiously interrupted, would be in a less extent, return, but not so on Market.

The question that is to be decided on Tuesday next is a very serious one to the city, and has loomed up suddenly, few understanding, until within a very short time, its real magnitude. The more it is examined, however, the less the occupation of the intersection of those two great avenues finds favor. It is to be regretted that the public has no opportunity of judging beforehand what the obstruction of that great intersection would be likely to be; we can, however, study with profit what has been the result of breaking the continuity of Seventh and of Locust streets, and draw our own conclusions by comparison.

AN UNJUST ACCUSATION.

In his circular explanatory of the peace negotiations Mr. Favre, Count Bismarck says that the refusal of the terms offered by him to France "must convince mankind that the French government believed their acceptance would produce peace, which was not desired by them." According to Bismarck's own statement, he offered to grant a simple armistice —not to make peace—upon terms which included the surrender of Biache,Strasbourg and Toul, and, besides these, " occupation of the fortifications of Paris, pending the negotiations, or else of a commanding post near the city." So far from the publication of this offer "convincing mankind" that the refusal of the French government to accept them indicates its desire to continue the war, they will go very far to prove that Count Bismarck coolly offered to France terms which he knew must inevitably be rejected;and that he did this because he had fully determined to prosecute the war until Paris falls. If the French government had removed all the obstructions in the line of Prussian communication, and had then virtually surrendered Paris into the hands of the Prussians, it would have betrayed its trust and abandoned all hope of securing peace without shame and dishonor. Such an act would have been an acknowledgment of hopeless ruin, and it would have enabled Bismarck to demand and secure whatever price he chose to ask for peace. His requirements are likely, at any rate, to be profit enough; but the French will not treat altogether at a disadvantage while they hold Paris and a considerable number of fortified towns. But if the Prussians occupied any commanding portion of the defences of Paris, as Bismarck himself proposed, the armistice would surely have ended with the entry of the Prussian army into Paris. Now it is not so certain that the Prussians will take the city, and mankind will be " convinced" that Favre, by refusing to give Bismarck such a chance, has proved that he has not yet parted with his common sense.

"O. M. Boyle—who is he?" This was rather an unfortunate inquiry made by General William B. Thomas in a recent speech at a public meeting. The answer is given by Mr. S. R. Boyle in an advertisement in another column.

CITY RAILWAY FARES.

The government tax upon city passenger railway fares has been removed. The New York city railway companies, which never charged more than six cents a passenger, have promptly adapted themselves to the new arrangement and reduced the fare to five cents. In Philadelphia, however, where expenses of all kinds are lower than in New York, the excessive price of seven cents is still kept up. The companies being all virtually united in a grand monopoly, of which the Board of Presidents is the government, refuse to make any concessions, and if,any one company were disposed to the new state of affairs and reduce the fare, it would be forbidden by the others. There is no other city in the Union so domineered over by the railway companies as Philadelphia is. The people are powerless, and unless the City Councils take some measures to protect them from the onerous taxation they impose, there can be no relief. We earnestly call the attention of the intelligent members of Councils, not controlled by the railroad monopolists, to the fact that every traveler on the city railway cars of Philadelphia pays two cents more per trip than do the passengers on the New York city railway cars. The difference is just forty per cent.

Just before the plebiscite was submitted to the French people the discovery of a conspiracy against the Emperor was announced, numbers of persons were arrested, newspapers containing pictures of the infernal machines designed for the destruction of the Imperial family were distributed throughout the French provinces, and at the trial of the conspirators an extraordinary array of testimony was offered against the accused. At the time it was suspected that the whole affair was a scheme devised to excite sympathy and secure votes for the Emperor. A despatch this morning says that certain documents have been discovered in Paris proving that all the evidence in the conspiracy trial was manufactured by the police. This confirms the assertions that were made at the time, and shows how corrupt and unprincipled were the means used by Napoleon to secure for himself the apparent endorsement of the people. This conspiracy business was but one part of a vast scheme which,in the remotest and obscurest corners of the country, won votes for the Empire from Frenchmen whose honest convictions were against it.

We are inclined to accept with confidence the despatch received by us from London yesterday declaring that the manifesto purporting to have been issued by the ex-Emperor Napoleon is bogus. Without doubt this document gave expression to certain sentiments entertained by the captive, such, for instance as dislike for the Provisional government, approval of its rejection of Bismarck's terms, and the theory that the war was demanded by the French people. But even when we accepted the authenticity of the letter without question, it was difficult to understand how Napoleon could have made such an ass of himself as to propose to Prussia to end the war merely for the sake of an alliance with France. The author of this document, whether "Bull Run" Russell or some equally notorious enemy of truth, did Napoleon as great injustice in making him out a blockhead as in attributing to him sentiments which he never uttered.

The Republican Invincibles will hold a meeting at Concert Hall this evening, to which the public are invited. Addresses will be delivered by a number of distinguished speakers, some of whom are old members of the Club.

THE WAR IN FRANCE
AFFAIRS AT METZ
City of Strasbourg to be Prussianized
Military Movements of Russia
FROM EUROPE.
[By the American Press Association.]
BERLIN, Oct. 5.—The French make unsuccessful sorties from Metz almost daily. The Prussians are invariably warned by their videttes of the approach of the French, and the latter are at once driven back in the confusion an extraordinary array of testimony was offered against the accused. At the time it was suspected that the whole affair was a scheme devised to excite sympathy and secure votes for the Emperor. FROM WASHINGTON
The Rumored Cabinet Changes
The Opposition to Secretary Cox Becoming Formidable.
The Darien Ship Canal Survey
The Rumored Changes.
[Special Despatch to the Phila. Evening Bulletin.]
WASHINGTON, Oct. 5.—There does not appear to be any good foundation for the reports concerning the Cabinet changes, other than in the case of Secretary Cox, against whose continuance in office there is much opposition on the part of Kansas politicians, arising mainly from the anti-radical views entertained by the Secretary. The movement having for its object the retirement of Mr. Cox is not likely at least to become very formidable until the near approach of the meeting of Congress, when the Republicans shall meet with defeats in Pennsylvania and Ohio next week, when, in all probability, there will be a strong effort brought to bear upon the President to select a more Radical Secretary of the Interior.
The Darien Ship Canal Survey.
Commander Selfridge, who is to complete the survey of the route for the ship canal across the Isthmus of Darien, the coming winter, is here to consult with Secretary Robeson in regard to the early sailing of the expedition.
Admiral Porter.
Admiral Porter has returned to-day, and will probably not return to active duty at the Navy Department, at least for the present.
The Weather is cool, pleasant and cloudy.

Naval Orders.
WASHINGTON, Oct. 5.—By direction of the President, Lieut. Col. Charles Heyland, Assistant Medical Purveyor, is detailed for temporary duty as a member of the Naval Retiring Board, in session at New York, vice Surgeon Charles Page, temporarily relieved.
General Splinter's Report.
The annual report of General Spinter shows that up to the 30th of June, 1870, gold certificates to the amount of $603,462,960, were printed, $405,664,000 have been redeemed and destroyed, and $58,247,120 are still outstanding. Gold certificates are now only redeemable at the New York Sub-treasury.
