HUMOROUS ITEMS.

As a specimen of short letters the following are hard to beat:

"Dear son, come home—a rolling stone gathers no moss. Your affectionate mother." "Dear mother, I won't come home—a setting hen never gets fat. Your affectionate son."

John was thought to be very stupid. He was sent to a mill one day, and the miller said "John, some people say you're a fool! Now, tell me what you do know, and what you don't know." "Well," replied John, "I know that the miller's hogs are fat." "Yes, that's well, John! Now, what don't you know?" "I don't know whose corn fattens 'em."

A good story is told of a physician who was called upon to visit a sick man, after he had himself taken a drop or two too much. Arrived at the bedside he fumbled over his patient a little, and at last got hold of his own pulse which he felt for a minute or two, and then, with customary medical gravity remarked, "Well, there's nothing much matter w' you—only a little drunk! Jist got' bed'n sleep little'n you'll be all right!"

A lawyer who was some times forgetful, having been engaged to plead the cause of an offender, began by saying: "I know the prisoner at the bar, and he bears the character of being a most consummate and impudent scoundrel. Here somebody whispered to him that the prisoner was his client when he immediately continued: "But what great and good man ever lived who was not calumniated by many of his contemporaries?"

An inquisitively inclined gentleman, of Chester, Conn., was, the other day walking over the Valley railroad at Haddam, and observed a singular-looking flask lying under a tree. To satisfy his curiosity, he picked it up and looked at it; held it up and smelled it; and finally shook it, and asked a boy, who seemed to have charge, "What is it?" "Only Nitro-Glycerine!" The flask was noticed to be very gently laid down, and a man was also seen vanishing in the distance.

A young married couple in a western town lately began housekeeping, and the first purchases of the head of the family at a grocery were: Five cents' worth of soda, five cents' worth of salt, two cents' worth of pepper, one cent's worth of chewing-gum and twelve cents' worth of soap. The bill amounted to twenty-five cents, and was paid by the young Benedict in specie, and as he left the store he remarked to the clerk that "keeping house was cheaper than boarding."

"Wall," the old lady began, "my dear, some people have very curious notions about gettin' religion. There's my neighbor, Deacon Jake Sniffin, who's makin' a fortune a tradin' horses. Wall, he thought he'd 'sperience a change of heart, but he didn't want to 'sperience a change of business. That was touchin' a tender pint—might interfere with profits, you know. So he thought he'd consult with Deacon Aminidab Tweedle, who kept store and did up the sugar and whiskey over night. 'Now look a here; you don' s'pose Brother Tweedle,' he began drawling the words through his nose—'you don' s'pose them little stories, sort o' lies like, that you and I tell in the way of trade, will be reckoned up again us at the day o' Judgement? Sarcumstanced as we air, we can't help it, you know.—I don't s'pose it'll make no difference at all in the sight o' the Lord, long's the heart's all right; now does it, brother Tweedle?"

Odd Scene at a Funeral.

At the funeral of a young man in Des Moines, recently, the services for the dead took place at the dwelling of the parents. After a most pathetic address, which brought tears from the eyes of all the young ladies present, the minister inquired if any of the dear friends of the deceased wished to say anything on this solemn occasion. A stranger here stepped forward, and after expressing sympathy with the friends of the deceased, remarked that the ways of Providence were inscrutable, and in this connection he wished to mention that he was the agent for a first-rate article of hair vigor for the State of Iowa. The corpse had used it for some years with great advantage, and he confidently recommended it, especially to the minister and undertaker present, as he perceived they were both painfully bald. "Shake the bottle, gentlemen, and rub the matter well with a stiff brush," said he. At this stage of the proceedings a slight disturbance occurred and the hair vigor man disappeared.
