FARM AND HOUSEHOLD ITEMS

How Peaches are Canned.

A correspondent describing a Mary land peach-orchard and the canning of the fruit says:

The orchard comprises 1018 acres, the greater part of the trees being in full bearing. The canning establishment is in the corner of the orchard; and from it there is nothing to be seen on every hand but peach-trees. The wagons, as they come in from the orchard, stop and unload; the baskets are passed up to hands who take the yellow peaches into the upper story of one house and white ones to the other. The internal arrangement of both houses is the same, and the processes in both are identical." paring is all done by hand; various machines have been tried, but none have yet been found to work satisfactorily. Some five hundred woman and girls are engaged in the establishment, the majority of them in paring. The fruit is halved, and the stone removed, and then pared. Under-sized fruit, and that which is too soft, is thrown aside, to be used as " piefruit." The woman are paid six cents a bucketful tor paring, and in this as in other steps of the process the accounts are kept by the use of checks. The peaches are passed through an opening to the floor below, where it goes into hopperlike receptacles, from which it is filled into the cans. As fast as the cans are filled they go to an inclined platform. which stands by the side of a tank of hot syrup, which is at a strength to make the fruit sweet enough for the table-about a pound of sugar to the gallon. The syrup is ladled into the cans, allowing it sufficient time to fill all the spaces among the fruit. The cans are then washed and wiped, to remove the syrup, the cover placed on, and passed over to the tinsmiths. The soldering is done very rapidly; each cover has a slightly turned edge, which drops into a groove in the top of the can; one sweep of the soldering-iron around this groove effectually closes the can. The covers have a small hole punched in the center; this is to allow the escape of the air, which is expanded by the heat of soldering. When the cover is secured, this little vent-hole is closed by a drop of solder. The tinsmiths work by the hundred, and make, according to their skill from eight dollars to twenty their skill, from eight dollars to twenty dollars a day. Some very rapid workers have been known to make as much as forty dollars a day. After the soldering the cans are placed upon a circular iron rack, which is raised by a crane and lowered into a circular vat of water, which can be rapidly brought to boiling by turning on steam. The caus being immersed, the heat of the water is gradually raised. The boiling is continued until the fruit is thoroughly cooked through, when the rack is raised from the vat and the cans taken to the storchouse. Labeling and packing in cases is done later in the season. Over-ripe and small peaches are canned without paring. They are put up in large cans, and sold to bakers, ## hotels, etc., as pie-fruit. Preserving the Flavor of Butter.

The German Agriculturist says that a great portion of flavor of fresh butter is destroyed by the usual mode of washing, and it recommends a thorough kneading for the removal of the buttermilk, and a subsequent pressing in a linen cloth. Butter thus prepared, according to our authority, is pre-eminent for its sweetness of taste and flavor, qualities which are retained a longer time. To improve man-ufactured butter we are advised by the the same authority to work thoroughly with fresh, cold milk, and then to wash in clear water, and it is said that even rancid butter may be rendered palatable by washing it in water to which a few drops of a solution of chloride of lime has been added.

Keeping Cider.

Sulphate of lime has been used for this purpose, but it imparts an unpleasant flavor. The best way is, after the fermen-tation has ceased, to rack the eider off into clean barrels, and keep them full and in a cool place. Cider cannot well be kept upon draught and remain sweet unless used up very rapidly. A partly filled barrel has a large surface of the liquid exposed to the air and it will sour or become " hard,, in a short time. The surest way is to bottle the cider.

Certain Cure for Ear-Ache.

As soon as any soreness is felt in the ear, let three or four drops of the tincture of arnica be poured in, and the orifice fill-ed with a little cotton, to exclude the air, and in a short time the uneasiness is forgotten. If the arnics be not resorted to till there is actual pain, the cure may not be as speedy, but is just as certain, although it may be necessary to repeat the application. It is a sure preventative for gathering in the ear, which is the usual causes of ear-ache.
