

A CURIOUS ADVENTURE.

SOME years ago I took my seat in the diligence from Marseilles to F—. The railway that now connects those cities was not yet contemplated.

There were five passengers in all. Of these one was a short, fat man, with smooth cheeks and red face. Though plainly dressed, his clothes were very good; he had a great number of rings on his fingers, and across his waistcoat he wore a thick gold chain, which he was careful to let me see was attached to a handsome watch, on the back of which was a crest of jewels.

There was no doubt he was a rich man, and that I, at all events, might have no doubt of it, he informed me that his income exceeded fifty thousand francs a year, and he bid fair to double it before five years were gone, so prosperous was his business.

I was partly amused and partly disgusted by his loquacity. Why he should make a confidant of me in particular I don't know, unless it was that I happened to sit next him. Among other bits of information he gave me to know that this was the first holiday he had indulged himself with for three years.

"Where do you get out?" I inquired.

"At F—," said he.

"But why do you go so far from Marseilles for a holiday?" I asked.

"Monsieur," he answered, "I am going to get married."

"The deuce!" I exclaimed, laughing, "and do you call that taking a holiday?"

"Why," said he, "that would depend. If I were going to marry an ugly woman, now I should call this tour by another name. But, my friend, the lady I am engaged to is an angel, sir; she might have sat for one of Mahomet's houris. Her eyes—"

Here we went off into a long account of his mistress' perfections, decorating his fluent description with all manner of shrugs, grimaces, and gesticulations.

"You are a very fortunate man, sir," said I, "and I wish you joy."

"Yes, and you may wish the lady joy, too, and congratulate her as well; for, give me leave to say it is not every woman who has the luck to meet with a husband who unites to the splendors of wealth the accomplishments of genius and the graces of courage."

I smothered a laugh.

"So you have genius and courage as well as money?"

He nodded vehemently.

"Without boasting," said he, "I think I may pride myself on being possessed of all the qualifications that recommend a man to the ladies."

"So long as they are sufficient to recommend you to the lady of your choice, you should be satisfied."

"They should be sufficient," he replied, "and in my own mind I am persuaded that they are sufficient; but, though the young lady is beautiful as a houri, I regret to say she is rather perverse in her taste, so that for a long time I could hardly make any headway in her affections. Indeed, she was weak-minded enough to avow a preference for a cousin of hers, a young lieutenant—a beggar, sir, and a mighty impudent dog to boot. What she could see in him I could never tell. I'll allow that his nose is straight, his eyes good, and his teeth white and regular; but what is the use of these things in a man without money!"

"To be sure," said I, "drowsily, for the day was warm, and the tendency to sleep was aggravated by my droning companion."

"I'll be perfectly frank with you," he continued, "and confess that I don't think she would have ever accepted me had it not been for her father, who is a poor man and is very eager to have me for a son-in-law, thinking I shall pay off his debts. I wish he may get it! Bah! I've allowed him to think anything he likes, for his thinking costs me nothing, and being anxious to wed the girl, who, I declare to you, is beautiful—"

And here he went off again into another long description, which he liberally garnished, as before, with shrugs and grimaces.

"Then you don't care about her love?" said I, dreamily.

"Not a fig," he answered—"not a fig! I only want her. At my time of life, sir, we know the hypocrisy of love—how easily it is counterfeited. I have a ring at home with a paste stone in it. I declare to you, it flashes like a diamond, and is thought as costly as the best of the real stones I wear. So with love. The counterfeit passes for the real, ninety-nine times in the hundred, and though I'll own I would rather have the real, if I can't get it I should be just as well satisfied with the sham."

He then branched off into some very cynical remarks on the nature of love, which, however, I am ashamed to say I do not remember, as I fell sound asleep very shortly after he had commenced them.

I was awakened by the diligence stopping at the Golden Lion Inn, in the principal street of F—.

The fat, red-faced babbler, who it seems had been awake through the whole journey, and had been boring a mild-looking gentleman who sat opposite him when he had found me asleep, got out and I followed him.

He pulled out his watch which sparkled most gorgeously as it took the sun's rays, and exclaimed turning to me.

"A quarter of four, sir. Half an hour after time."

"I'll bet you that it is not," said a gentleman with a very fierce moustache, who stood smoking a cigar before the door of the low-roofed apartment.

"I should know," retorted the little red-faced man, turning sharp upon him, "for this is one of Leroy's best watches. It cost me two thousand francs."

"I'll bet you ten louis that it is not one of Leroy's watches," said the moustached smoker coolly.

The red-faced man shrugged his shoulders, and went into the traveler's room, saying to me:

"Don't dine here. We can do better at a cafe."

"I'll wager you the value of the watch that the watch is worth nothing; and if you win you will receive what you will find it worth your while to take," said the gentleman with the moustache following us.

"I did not address my remarks to you, sir."

"I'll bet that you did," said the other with the most provoking coolness.

The little man, amazed by this persecution touched his forehead, to signify that the man with the moustache was mad.

"I'll bet you don't prove that I'm mad," said the other.

There was a pause. They looked like two dogs waiting to be slipped for a fight.

"Upon my word," said the red-faced man, "I know nothing of this fellow. He is a most impudent rascal, whoever he is; and I have a good mind to make him march off."

"I'll make you any bet you like you don't make me march off!" exclaimed the other pulling his moustache; and I'll further bet you anything you like that I make you take the road back to Paris, and that, too, without any delay."

The little man, whose face was now a deep crimson with rage, blurted out:

"You won't find that a very easy matter, for I came here to get married."

"One hundred napoleons you do not marry."

"Sir you are an impudent scoundrel, and I will pull your nose."

"I'll make you any bet you like, you see!"

The little man stamped with rage. He glared around him for some minutes in silence, then exclaimed:

"Do you want me to shoot you?"

"I'll bet you don't shoot me."

"Where can we procure pistols?" exclaimed the red-faced man, breathing short.

"The landlord will accommodate us," answered the other.

He hurried into the house and re-appeared with a box containing a brace of pistols.

I had hitherto treated the affair as a joke, laughing in my sleeve at the red-faced man's rage, and the other's cool insolence. But I thought it was now time to interpose.

"Gentlemen," I began.

But the moustached man turned upon me with a frown.

"I believe this gentleman to be a coward, sir," said he, "and if you interfere, I shall conclude you are conspiring to prevent him from proving himself a coward."

I said no more, but followed the two men to a lonely spot in the park, when the cigar hero was willing to become his second.

Having loaded the pistols, we placed the men. It was agreed that I should give the signal, which was to throw a five franc piece in the air.

My position was a peculiarly disagreeable one. Up to the last moment I had believed that the whole business was only a rather cruel practical joke on the part of the man with the moustache, and as my curiosity was excited to follow this adventure to its conclusion. I had volunteered to be the red-faced man's second; but it seemed now that one or the other, or both must be killed.

"Sir," said the man with the cigar, turning to me, "I believe Master Jacques to be an honest man, but though I can vouch for his wine, I can't vouch for his pistols. Before the gentleman and I make a target of one another, be so good as to throw that five-france piece in the air to see how my pistol carries."

I did as he desired, and tossed the money about seven yards high.

I heard the report of a pistol, and the piece of money fell indented.

"Bet," said the man with the moustache "that I pierce that leaf vibrating at the extremity of yonder bough."

And before the other could answer, the trigger was pulled and the leaf was pierced.

"Bet," continued the man with the most ridiculous coolness, "that I shoot you clean through the pupil of the left eye, and lay you dead, and that you miss me."

The other was white as a ghost.

"I believe you," he said; trembling from head to foot, and throwing his pistol down.

"I guess your motives and admire your stratagem, and as I am not yet prepared to die, shall take the road back again to Marseilles."

In fact we saw him deposit himself in the imperiale of the diligence.

I turned to the moustached man for explanation. He asked me to take a glass of wine with him in the traveler's room, and with great good humor proceeded to solve the enigma.

He was a friend of the young lieutenant, and famous as the most deadly shot in France. He had received a letter only the day before from his friend, begging him to come back to F—, and help him to carry out a ruse which he trusted would enable him to marry the girl he was passionately in love with.

The moustached gentleman complied, left, Paris, and reached F— in time to receive from his friend's lips particulars of the stratagem he and the young girl had concerted between them.

The stratagem was perfectly successful. The little red-faced man as I afterwards heard, on his reaching Marseilles, wrote to the father of his intended bride, apologizing for not having been able to go down to them. You may believe he took good care not to inform the father of the real reason that had prevented him from paying his duties to his betrothed.

The red-faced man, however, had no intention of breaking off his marriage, until he was accosted one morning in the streets of Marseilles by the moustached gentleman, who asked if he still persisted in his intention to marry the young lady.

"Certainly," was the reply.

"Then," said the other, "if you want to reach her hand, you will have to mount, first, on my dead body, and secondly, on the dead body of the lieutenant. Are you prepared to scale these fortresses?"

"Certainly not."

"Then go home; write to the lady's father that circumstances compel you to abandon your promise to wed her. I shall know by the day after to-morrow if that letter has been written. If yes, I will be your friend, and help you, as I have helped the lieutenant, in any honorable love scheme you may choose to enter upon, if no, be prepared to meet me in the evening."

The letter was written, and six months after the young lady was married to the lieutenant.

A Reminiscence of the 9th Penn'a Cavalry.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Newark

Echo, sends the following to that paper:

In the fall of 1864 the Ninth Pennsylvania Veteran Cavalry Regiment, better known as the "Lochiel," was stationed at Whiteside, Tenn., about sixteen miles north of Chattanooga, guarding an important railroad bridge at that place and scouting daily by battalion through Will's valley and south towards Rome, Ga.

Among the officers of the regiment (and the writer was one) was Surgeon Moore. He was a jolly, brave fellow, once leading the regiment in a charge in front of Raleigh, N. C., when the Lieutenant Colonel was wounded and was himself wounded a few moments afterwards.— Moore was an Irishman by birth and was possessed of all the wit and chivalry of his countrymen: He was an exceedingly successful surgeon and was widely known in Philadelphia, where he resided at the breaking out of late war, and where he died not long after the closing of the war. He was a Benedict, but was nevertheless fond of the fair sex and more than once was smitten by the Southern beauties, which at last got him into a scrape, as we shall see.

While the regiment was lying at Whiteside, Surgeon Moore got acquainted with a charming young widow, who lived about three miles from camp, and whom he frequently visited after taps, unbeknown to Colonel Jordan, afterwards Brevet Brigadier General. Lieut. Col. David H. Kimmell enjoyed a good joke and was often too practical in perpetrating them.

One evening the Lieut. Colonel made arrangements with the Surgeon to visit the young widow after taps and to steal out of camp so that Col. Jordan would be kept in ignorance of their nocturnal larks.

After the arrangement had been completed Lieut. Col. Kimmell took into his confidence four or five regimental scouts and instructed them to disguise themselves as rebels and to post themselves on horseback near the house of the widow and that when he and the Surgeon should arrive to charge on them, discharge their pistols in the air and demand their surrender, but of course to let him, the Lieut. Colonel, escape.

Night came, and at the appointed hour the Lieut. Colonel and Surgeon, quietly mounted their horses and stole from camp. On the way to the widow's the Surgeon was particularly jolly. He cracked jokes and was in high glee at the proposed flirtations. At last they reached the end of their journey and just as Surgeon Moore had dismounted the scouts charged down upon him, discharged their pistols and demanded his surrender, Lieut. Colonel Kimmell of course putting spurs to his sorrel horse and returning to camp.

At first Surgeon Moore resisted, but thinking that discretion was the better part of valor yielded. The scouts rushed him into the house of his terror-stricken lady-love and humiliated him in her presence by compelling him to sign a parole to report in Richmond, Va., in thirty days, threatening him if he refused. They then made him take off all his clothing except his under-garments and then taking his horse sent him back to camp, afoot through the cold night air, having to pass over stony roads and wade through brooks. At a late hour he arrived in camp, almost exhausted from the fatigue and exposure. He was quickly wrapped in blankets and a hot whisky punch ordered. It was some time before he could explain the cause of his ludicrous appearance. He puffed and blew like a porpoise, and declared that but for his bravery, which the enemy respected, they would have murdered him. On the following day he entered Col. Jordan's tent and with a sorrowful face told him his troubles, and, of course received no sympathy. He began to make preparations for returning East and reporting himself as a prisoner at Richmond. He was allowed to remain in blissful ignorance of the trick played on him for several days, when his garments were returned to him and the plot exposed. A madder man never was seen than Surgeon Moore. He threatened all manner of vengeance and intimated that he would prefer charges against all engaged in the plot.— But as he violated orders in leaving camp at night, he thought better of the matter and pocketed his wrath. The telegraph operator at Whiteside, hearing of Surgeon Moore's capture, and, not understanding the joke, telegraphed the same to Gen. Thomas, then in Nashville, organizing an army in anticipation of Hood's last desperate and disastrous movement.

Of course back came a dispatch from the General to Colonel Jordan demanding an explanation of the matter, and, not in pleasant words, asking how it was that with his force of men rebel cavalry was permitted to dash into the vicinity of his camp and surprise and capture his Surgeon at night. An explanation was returned and in a few days the regiment left Whiteside and proceeding to Marietta, Ga., joined Kilpatrick's cavalry and with Sherman "marched down to the sea," and nothing more was heard from General Thomas in reference to the surprise and capture.

The lesson had its desired effect, for Surgeon Moore never was known to call on a lady during the balance of his life.

Many a drink of whiskey was presented by Moore to the officers thereafter by the latter nearly mentioning his capture. The subject was always quickly changed and the whiskey produced.

Poor fellow, he is dead now and our laughter will not disturb him.

John's Luck.

John, the fool of the New York Sun, was made rich in spite of himself at Long Branch, and this is the way it was done:

"Just as I was the hungriest, Longfellow and Henry Bassett were brought out, and they went around the corner like two Colt's revolvers. All the nice young men around me stood up and bowed and scraped and held up their one finger as if they were stopping an omnibus. They all yelled 'a hundred to eighty on Harry Bassett.' They all appeared to be so very polite that I held up my finger too, and nodded and bowed back to all of them. I never saw such a polite lot of young men before. You would have thought I was the Grand Duke of Alexis. I kept up the bowing just as long as they did, and pretty soon the race was over, and I confess I was agreeably surprised to see about four hundred young men file up and each one chuck a $100 bill in my lap. Then I thought that lot of young men just about the nicest lot of chaps I had ever met. There I sat with $10,000 in my lap, and much to my astonishment, I found out that all the time I was pointing my finger and bowing back to 'em, darned if I wasn't taking every darned bet that was made, and darned if I knew it. I only had eight dollars in my pocket, and if I had lost I'd slept in an oyster-bed that night, sure."

An Irishman who was known to have wholesome dread of the infernal fire, was taken by some of his friends, while intoxicated to the glass-house, where they left him until about midnight to sleep off the liquor. The foreman at that time happened to spy him sleeping in the corner, and thinking he was one of the workmen, he walked over to him and waking him up asked what he had worked at. Patrick, having been waked up so suddenly, and seeing the lights of the fires in full blast, thought he was in hell, and replied to the foreman: "Howly mother of Moses, it's in limbo I am at last; well, Mr. Devil, I need to work at the shoemaking in the other world, but as long as you have me here you can put me at what you like."

Mrs. McKenny, the young married woman who shot and killed A. M. Cummings at Petaluma, Cal., for slandering her, has been bailed in $20,000.

A Jones county, Georgia, gentleman went hunting last week and caught a bird with only one leg, and not even the stump of another. Evidently a freak of nature.

Indolence is to the mind like moss to a tree; it bindeth it up so as to stop its growth.

Pride and vanity are purveyors of trouble and danger; proud persons are neither safe nor happy.

CARLISLE CARRIAGE FACTORY.

A. B. SHERK

has a large lot of second-hand work on hand, which he will sell cheap in order to make room for new work.

FOR THE SPRING TRADE.

He has, also, the best lot of

NEW WORK ON HAND.

You can always see different styles. The material is not in question any more, for it is the best used. If you want satisfaction in style, quality and price, go to this shop before purchasing elsewhere. There is no firm that has a better Trade, or sells more in Cumberland and Perry counties.

REPAIRING AND PAINTING

promptly attended to. Factory—Corner of South and 4th Streets.

3 dp

CARLISLE, PA.

ST. ELMO HOTEL,

(FORMERLY "THE UNION.")

JOS. M. FEEGE, Proprietor,

317 & 319 ARCH STREET,

PHILADELPHIA.

Terms, $2.50 Per Day.

THE ST. ELMO is centrally located and has been re-fitted and refurbished, so that it will be found as comfortable and pleasant a stopping place as there is in Philadelphia.

New Millinery Goods

At Newport, Pa.

I BEG to inform the public that I have just returned from Philadelphia, with a full assortment of the latest styles of

MILLINERY GOODS,

HATS AND BONNETS, RIBBONS, FRENCH FLOWERS

FEATHERS,

CHIGNONS,

LACE CAPES, NOTIONS.

And all articles usually found in a first-class Millinery Establishment. All orders promptly attended to. We will sell all goods as cheap as can be got elsewhere.

DRESS-MAKING done to order and in the latest style, as I get the latest fashions from New York every month. Goffering done to order, in all widths. I will warrant all my work to give satisfaction. All work done as low as possible.

ANNIE ICKES,

Cherry Street, near the Station,

516 13

Newport, Pa.

PERRY COUNTY

Real Estate, Insurance,

AND

CLAIM AGENCY.

LEWIS POTTER &amp; CO.,

Real Estate Brokers, Insurance, & Claim Agents

New Bloomfield, Pa.

WE INVITE the attention of buyers and sellers to the advantages we offer them in purchasing or disposing of real estate through our office.

We have a very large list of desirable property, consisting of farms, towns, properties, mills, stores and tavern stands, and real estate of any description which we are prepared to offer at great bargains. We advertise our property very extensively, and use all our efforts, skill, and diligence to effect a sale. We make no charge, unless the property is sold while registered with us. We also draw up deeds, bonds, mortgages, and all legal papers at moderate rates.

Some of the best, cheapest, and most reliable fire, life, and cattle insurance companies in the United States are represented at this agency.—Property insured either on the cash or mutual plan, and perpetually at $4 and $5 per thousand.

Pensions, bounties, and all kinds of war claims collected. There are thousands of soldiers and heirs of soldiers who are entitled to pensions and bounty, who have never made application. Soldiers, if you were wounded, ruptured, or contracted a disease in the service from which you are disabled, you are entitled to a pension.

When widows of soldiers die or marry, the minor children are entitled to the pension.

Families having any business to transact in our line, are respectfully invited to give us a call, as we are confident we can render satisfaction in any branch of our business.

No charge for information.

430 1/2 LEWIS POTTER & CO.

Farmers Take Notice.

THE subscriber offers for Sale

THRASHING MACHINES, JACKS and HORSE-POWER.

With Tumbling Shaft, and Side-Gearing, Warranted to give satisfaction in speedy and perfect thrashing, light draft and durability, on reasonable terms. Also

PLOWES

Of Superior Make.

CORN SHELLERS,

KETTLES,

SCOVES,

AND ALL CASTINGS,

made at a country Foundry. Also,

A GOOD MILL SCREW,

in excellent order, for sale at a low rate.

I refer those wishing to buy to John Adams, Samuel Shuman, John Boden, Ross Hench, at Ickesburg; Jacob Shoemaker & Son, Elliptsburg; Thomas Morrow, Loyville; John Elicker, Jacob Flinkinger, Centre.

620 13

SAMUEL LIGGETT,

Ickesburg, May 14, 1872.

ROBINSON HOUSE,

(Formerly kept by Woodruff and Turbett,)

New Bloomfield, Perry County, Pa.

AMOS ROBINSON, Proprietor.

This well known and pleasantly located hotel has been leased for a number of years by the present proprietor, and he will spare no pains to accommodate his guests. The rooms are comfortable, the table well furnished with the best in the market, and the bar stocked with choice liquors. A careful and attentive hostler will be in attendance. A good livery stable will be kept by the proprietor.

April 2, 1871. If

LOCHMAN'S

Writing Fluid!

THIS FLUID is warranted EQUAL to ARNOLD'S and is sold at a low price. The money will be refunded to those buying it, if it does not prove entirely satisfactory.

For sale by F. Mortimer, New Bloomfield.

MILLER & BLUES,

Sole Agents,

429 Market Street,

Philadelphia.

2081