Thirty Miles of Fire.

The Wilmington (North Carolina) Star, of April 11, says: We learn from parties who arrived here yesterday on the Wilmington Columbia and Augusta Railroad that fires are raging nearly all along the line of railway from three miles beyond Fair Bluff to Flemington. Forests have been swept, fences and wood destroyed, and in some instances, it is reported, houses have been burned. Many of the poorer classes, who were getting ready for their crops, have suffered severely and will be thrown back materially in this respect. One widow lady is instanced who had just got a new fence around her house and was getting ready to plant, when the flames came and consumed her fence, and her house narrowly escaped the same fate. Great destruction is reported among the turpentine farms, and the loss to this branch of industry will no doubt be very heavy. The fire is said to extend for twenty miles back in the country in some places, and is reported to be rapidly approaching the line of the Charlotte Road.

The cause assigned for this destructive conflagration is that Monday's passenger locomotive lost its smoke stack, and ran all the way from Grier's station to Flemington in that condition, belching forth showers of sparks and cinders. It being dry and windy these sparks and cinders communicated with the woods, and the work of devastation commenced. We learn that the sufferers by the fire are very indignant and many of them, some of whom are among the most prominent citizens along the line of the road, are talking very seriously of bring suit against the railroad company to recover damages for heavy loss they have sustained.

The fire is still raging with unabated fury, and now covers an area along the line of the road of about twenty-five or thirty miles, with now and then a narrow strip of woodland which has thus far escaped the devastating element.

A Sad Case.

The Milwaukee Sentinel says: Wednesday morning the inhabitants of the quiet village of Hartford were startled with the report that Mr. Martin McHugo and his wife had been drowned in a cistern. Mr. McHugo and his wife resided about one mile from the village on a small farm, and were quite alone, their youngest child, a young miss of sixteen, being in this city at school. As the house stands several rods from the road, the fact that the passing neighbors did not observe either of them for a day or two was not thought strange.

But a friend having occasion to call on Wednesday morning suspected that all was not right, and upon examination of the premises discovered to his horror the dead bodies of the two unfortunate persons in the cistern. As neither the man and his wife had been seen since Monday forenoon, the theory of the casuality is that they must have fallen in on that day, and perished by the slow agony of a living burial. The woman is supposed to have accidently fallen in, and her screams for help brought her husband to her rescue, who dropped her a rope which she fastened under her arms. Then in his attempt to draw her out, the curbing and planks gave way, precipitating him also into the cistern.

The water was only four feet deep, but without the ability to rescue themselves from the terrible situation, or to have their ery of distress heard by mortal ear, they perished almost in sight and hearing of their own neighbors-dying together, but as thoroughly isolated from all other help and sympathy as if locked in a foundering ship that goes down into the depths of the

A Swindler.

A fellow calling himself Rev. J. Hale Barney, was arrested last week at Washington, for fraud. He was engaged in sending circulars to the officials throughout the country bearing the forged signature of the President's private secretary. This has been sent to a large number of postmasters and internal revenue officers in the south. It opens with the announcement that the "annexed conversations are sent by the President, in confidence," and adds that the Rev.J. Hale Barney has been selected to receive contributions, which the givers are requested secretly to forward to his address. The objects of the contribution are explained in what purports to be two interviews between the President and his secretary.

An investigation of the swindle led to the discovery that the owner of boarding house No. 426 Sixth street, Washington, had received a trunk from Baltimore, preceded with a dispatch to the effect that the owner would arrive in a few days and diowner would arrive in a few days and di-recting that all letters to him arriving in the meantime should be dropped in the trunk. A large unmber of letters inclos-ing money were received. It is said three persons are engaged in this swindle, one being a well known, influential Washing-tonian. All will be arrested and brought to trial. to trial.

During the Train lunacy investigation last week, Judge Daly requested the women present to retire, as the evidence about to be given would be unfit for them to hear. Mrs. Brooker, sister of Vic. Woodbull, refused to leave, saying that the evidence would not hurt her morals. Judge Daly ordered to clear the Court, and both male and female auditors were obliged to New Advertisements.
