

Five Hundred Bodies in the River.
 The Little Rock (Ark.) Gazette, April 16, says: From Cornelius Brown, member of the House from this county, we have the following particulars concerning the destruction by water of the Perkins graveyard: The cemetery was opened by Constantine Perkins who died during the war, and is sixty miles below Little Rock, on the Arkansas river. The river was very high on Friday last week, at which time the yard commenced caving into the river, exposing to view mouldy coffins, and in some instances their contents. The water kept rising until the cemetery was swept completely away, and about 500 coffins were washed into the river. It is thought they will all be recovered, as the graveyard is situated in what is known as the "Horse Shoe," between the river and a lake, where the water forms an eddy. When the graveyard was opened it was situated about 900 yards from the river, but each successive high water and more of the bank away, until the last flood came which destroyed every vestige of the hallowed spot wherein were the loved remains of many citizens. The last body was washed into the river on Sunday, at which time citizens of the neighborhood were summoned out by a justice of the peace to rescue the bodies from the river, and at which time about thirty-five were recovered. It is thought that all the bodies will be rescued except those who have laid in the ground until they have decayed. Among the bodies recovered and recognized were those of Seeley Pillow, a woman who died six weeks ago, and Shade Shaley, a man who had been dead about a year. The wildest excitement prevails in the vicinity of the destroyed cemetery, as the men and women are searching the muddy waters of the Arkansas for the remains of their dead friends.

Sad Affair.

An unusually sad affair occurred a short time since at the residence of Mr. Charles Conner, on Frederick street, this city.—Mrs. Conner had occasion to leave the house for a moment, and she placed her infant son, Willie, aged exactly one year and one week on the day of the occurrence, in charge of a brother aged about five years. She was summoned to the dying bed of a neighbor. When she returned she found the child missing, and the inside cellar door open. Of course every motherly instinct was aroused as the thought crossed her mind of what might be the case and she rushed to the cellar—only to find her boy a corpse, having drowned in the water that the cellar contained from the recent rains—a depth of at least two feet. She had not been absent more than five minutes, and then only at the urgent solicitation of the family of the dying young lady next door. The child had crept along the floor, it is supposed, until it reached the cellar door, which had sprung open in the mother's absence, the latch being defective. Her agony, when she found that her darling infant boy was dead, can better be imagined than described. The child looked as natural as though living, but the vital spark had fled. The sorrow of that stricken family is too deep and sacred for further details. Coroner Bair visited the premises, but the sad circumstances were so plain and the scene of the bereaved mother hugging her lifeless child to her bosom so distressing, that he left without holding the usual inquest. It was certainly not necessary in this case.—Lancaster Express.

A Queer Case.

In Philadelphia last week a singular case of black mailing was brought before court. Charles Rose and his wife, Fanny Rose, and Julia Lipman were charged with conspiracy to extort money by fraudulent means from Sophia Gerome. Sophia Gerome claims to be possessed of considerable means, and previous to August last enjoyed the independence of widowhood. She then married, but having possibly no confidence in her husband, or wishing him to love her for herself alone, desired to conceal from him that she was possessed of anything beyond her own personal charms. She therefore made an arrangement with Julia Lipman, that she should represent herself as the aunt of the second-time wife, and that Gerome should be kept ignorant of her worldly store, and that she should be led to believe that whatever money she used was procured from the fictitious aunt. This was accordingly done, but it is alleged that Julia Lipman, in concert with Rose and wife, did, upon the threat to expose the arrangement to the husband of prosecutrix, obtain from her money and valuables to the amount of $900, until she becoming tired of the extortion at length refused to submit any longer, whereupon the husband was informed by defendant of the wife's scheme, and a tremendous family disturbance was the result. Mrs. Gerome appeared at the hearing with a black eye, whether the result of the marital row or not did not transpire.

Found Dead.

Milford, April 29.—An unknown man was found in an unconscious state in a boat in the Delaware river here to-day. He died shortly after being found. He was dressed in a dark suit and white shirt. Evidently a printer from Tyrone, Pa., judging from papers found in his pocket.
