Boarding-House Reminiscences.

A gentleman of a waggish disposition was in search of a boarding-house, and finally came across one that, judging from its outward appearance, he thought might suit. He presented himself, inquired for the landlady, and in a few moments the buxom dame made her appearance. After a short conversation, he concluded he would engage, and ask to be shown to his room, as it was getting late and he was weary, and desired to retire to bed. His request was complied with, and the landlady left him. Next morning, on his coming to breakfast, the following dialogue ensued: Landlady—Well, Mr. Jones, how did you sleep last night? Mr. J.—Sleep! Why, I didn't sleep a minute all night, and nobody else could if they were fixed in the same manner I was. Landlady—Why, Mr. Jones, what was the matter? Mr. J.—Matter? Why, them confounded bedbugs up in that bed like to eat me up! Landlady (indignantly)—Sir, do you know what you are talking about? Bedbugs, indeed! I will have you to understand, sir, that there is not one single bedbug in this entire house, sir. Mr. J. (interrupting)—I am perfectly aware of that fact, Madam, but allow me to inform you that they are all married and have got infernal large families! Landlady—You can leave my house, sir! You shall not talk in that way, sir. You are nothing but a growler any way. This morning when I gave you a towel to wipe your face and hands after washing, you had the impudence to tell me it wasn't clean, and, to my knowledge, every boarder in the house wiped on it, and you were the very first one to complain.

Gone Back on the Document.

A short time since a colored man entered the office of the Clerk of the county Court, in Virginia, and advancing to a table where the Deputy Clerk was busily engaged, he produced a marriage license for which he had paid the legal fee a few days before. "Boss," said he, poking the license under the nose of the absorbed Deputy. "What's it?" was the impatient response. "Boss," continued the darkey, "De lady declines dis document, and I fotch it in to git my money back." It was a little consenting to the darkey to be told some men went further and fared worse, but when assured his money could not be returned, he turned indignantly on his doubledoled pump and muttered as he made his exit, "Ebery-body's gone back on the document."

Patriotic Bunkum.

An old soldier writes: "The day before we left Camp Vredenburg, near Freehold, New Jersey, for 'the front,' we who held commissions had a little glorification in the woods near by where we made speeches full of wounds, drank toasts full of scars, and sang songs full of flags. We called on a young lawyer, an invited guest, to make a speech, which he did. He urged the young men everywhere to enlist for the defence of their country. Some one, whose cups of wine exceeded his discretion, asked the orator: "Why do you not go yourself?" The young lawyer threw out his right hand in spread-eagle fashion and said: "I love my country! I love her peaceful hills and dales! In short, I love my country as well as anybody, and I am going to stay at home and enjoy it."

The other day at dinner I sat in front of a stout old gentleman and his young wife. I noticed he always drinks Burgundy, which, being too strong for her, of course throws her off on to Croton water. Looking up sweetly, into his Burgundy eyes, I heard the innocent young wife murmur: "Dear Hubble—pet, can't you give me twenty dollars to buy a lovely duck of an 'Astrahan muf, which I saw in a Broadway window?" "Yes, sweetness—by-and-by." "Yes, you say buy and buy, but, darling, where are the $20 to buy with?"

A Bridget applied to the family of a citizen up town yesterday, with her clothes dripping like a water-spout. On being interrogated as to her condition, she said she understood the lady of the house wanted a wet nurse, and she had come ready for service.

I say, old boy," cried Paul Pry to an excavator, whom he espied at the bottom of a yawning gulf, "what are you digging there?" A big hole," the old boy replied. Paul was not to be put off in this fashion. "What are you going to do with the hole?" he asked. "Going to cut it up into small holes," rejoined the old boy, "and retail them to farmers for post holes."

The pioneer who was shot by an Indian through the crown of his hat had an arrow escape.
