HUMOROUS.

Bound to Stick.

We shall never forget that evening we spent at Magruder's, years ago. We admired Miss Magruder, and went around to see her. It was summer time and moonlight and she sat upon the piazza. The carpenter had been there that day gluing up the rustic chairs on the porch, so we took a seat on the step, in front of Miss Magruder, where we would gaze into her eyes and drink in her smiles. It seems probable that the carpenter must have upset his glue-pot on the spot where we sat, for after enjoying Miss Magruder's remarks for a couple of hours, and drinking several of her smiles we tried to rise for the purpose of going home, but found that we were immovably fixed to the step. Then Miss Magruder said: "Don't be in a hurry," and we told her we believed we wouldn't. The conversation had a sadder tone after that, and we sat there thinking whether it would be better to ask Miss Magruder to withdraw while we disrobed and went home in Highland costume, or whether wo should urge her to warm up the poker so that we could thaw ourselves out; or whether we should give one, terrific wrench and then ramble down the yard backward. About midnight Miss Magruder yawned and said she believed she would go to bed. Then we suddenly asked her if she thought her father would have any obejetion to lending us his front steps for a few days; because we wanted to take them home for a pattern. We think Miss Magruder must have entertained doubts of our sanity for she rushed in, called her father and screamed. Magruder came down with a doublebarreled gun. Then we explained the situation in a whisper, and he procured a saw and cut out the piece of the step to which we were attached. Then we went homewearing the patch, and before two o'clock crushed out our young love for Miss Magruder. We never called again and she threw herself away on a young dry-goods man. There is a melancholy satisfaction in recalling these memories of youth, and of reflecting upon the influences of glue upon the emotions of the human heart.

Bables and Ballots. "Poor critters!" exclaimed Mrs. Partington with a sigh. "What poor creatures are you pitying now, mother?" asked the inquisitive Ike. "Them unfortunate wimmin in England as are clambering after the sufferage," replied the good old lady. "From what I hear, they are all either unmarried wimmin or married wimmin without children, and would much rather have babies than ballots if they could get 'em. Now, sence it appears they can't, I think the least the men might do would be to let 'em vote, if it's enny comfort to the poor things. Sufferage is a woman's lot,

An exchange has its old man, who reads that paper and no other, and thus describes him: "Chewed tobacco sixty years and got fat on it. Then he took up hard drink and followed it for twenty-five years, and grew younger every day. Now he reads his paper by moonlight alone, through an inverted microscope, to make the type appear small enough for his eyesight. Walks four miles every morning for his drinks before breakfast. Chops a cord of wood between each meal. Tried to die of old age thirteen times and failed every whack. Attends to the wants of his old and feeble grandson, and superintends the funerals of his posterity with a decency becoming his years."

It is related of Dan Rice that when in Detroit he was greeted by a seedy looking chap with " Is this old Dan ?" "It is," replied Daniel pleasantly. "I'm powerful glad to see you; we had an arrival at our house last night, and we are going to call him Dan Rice." Dan's countenance fell at once, and in a solemn whisper he said : "I'm sorry, but you are a little too late. I've shaken hands with forty-eight men this morning who had named babies after me, and my last five dollar bill has been out. You'd better strike Barnum whenhe comes."

A self-possessed young man called at a house in Atlanta, Ga., a few mornings ago, and asked to see his wife. "She is not here," replied the mistress of the house. "There is no one here but the members of my own family." "Well," replied he, "it's one of them I want to see. I married your eldest daughter last-night."

13"A farmer lost a gimlet in the woods near Monticello, Minn., three years ago. and the other day be cut down an ironwood tree, fast in the forks of which he foundnot his gimlet, but—a three quarter inch auger! He is sorry he didn't wait a year or two longer, as a two-inch auger was just what he wanted.

While a couple of women were earnestly discussing the other day the merits of a certain physician, one of them saked the other what kind of a doctor he was. "Sure, I dunno," was the reply, "but I think it's an alapaca doctor they call him."

A colored convict in Georgia got a religious conviction at a revival meeting one morning last week, and a secular con-viction for theft at a police court in the af-
