How he got his Bitters Free. Jonah Filcher, is the town clerk of North Bergen. He had the misfortune to have been the victim of an accident which has shortened one of his legs several inches. When Jonah stands on his right leg he is about six feet high. When on his left he is about four feet six. Now it happened the other day that Jonah wanted his bitters, and he went into a gin mill near to get them. After he had stepped up to the counter, he supported himself on his left leg and his chin scarcely reached above the counter. The barkeeper looked down upon his diminutive customer: "What will you have?" he asked. "Give me brandy sour," replied Jonah. The barkeeper went to the other end of the bar to prepare the decoction. He was some time about it, and Jonah, tired of standing upon his left foot, elevated himself on his right, a foot and a half. The barkeeper returned and looking at the tall Jonah didn't recognize him, "Where in thunder!" he said, "has that little sucker gone who just ordered a brandy sour?" "What's the matter?" asked Jonah. "Why," was the reply, "a little fool came here and ordered brandy sour, and while I was making it he walked out." "Never mind," said Jonah, "I'll take it."

And Jonah took it. While he drank he lowered himself on his left foot, and the barkeeper for the first time saw how he had been fooled. When Jonah drew out his twenty cents for the treat, the barkeeper told him it was all right. That sell was worth twice the money.

The following pathetic lines are supposed to have emanated from the obituary genius of the Philadelphia Ledger: "The death angel smote Alexander McGlue, And gave him protracted repose; He wore a checked shirt and a number nine shoe And he had a pink wart on his nose. No doubt he is happier dwelling in space Over there on the evergreen shores, His friends are informed that his funeral takes place Precisely at quarter past four!"

Bibbs was married the other day to a very quiet, not to say stupid girl, with a face like a doll's. Some one remarked to Muffington that Bibbs had been on the lookout for a wife for sometime, and had now "wood and won." Muffington said, "Yes, wooden one, that's just what she is."

A dashing belle of Green Bay, a Miss Ruth Taylor, a few days since was presented with a silk dress for her gallantry in taking hold of a spanner and helping pull the engine to a fire. The firemen have had to add two hundred feet to the rope since then. All the girls want silk dresses.

A wife wanted her husband to sympathize with her in a feminine quarrel, but he refused, saying, "I've lived long enough to learn that one woman is just as good as another, if not better." "And I," retorted the exasperated wife, "have lived long enough to learn that one man is just as bad as another, if not worse!"

"How does that look, eh?" said a big fisted Wall-street man to a friend holding up one of his brawny hands. "That," said his friends, "looks as though you'd got 'short' on your soap."

A Milesian astonished a grocer by entering his store with this request: "Mister M'Gra, would you lend me an empty barrel of flour to make a hen coop for me dog?"

"I say, Pat, where did you get that rogue's hat?"—"Please, your honor," said Pat, "tis an old one of yours that missus gave me yesterday when you went to town."

A cheerful giver put the following note in a pair of pantaloons sent to the Michigan sufferers: "There, take 'em; last pair I've got. Don't get burned out again."

"Why do you use paint?" asked a violinist of his daughter. "For the same reason that you use rosin, papa." "How's that?" "Why, to help me draw my beau!"

"Coffee, is that the second bell?" "No massa, dat's de second ringing of de fusa bell. We habn't got no second bell in dis hotel."

What cord is that which is full of knots which no one can untie, and in which no one can tie another?—A cord of wood.

A man in Norfolk street, in the city lately advertised: "One basement to let in dis house in der third story."

A man's dearest object should be his wife, but sometimes it is his wife's wardrobe.
