Hiram's Call on his Girl.

Hiram Baxton, arrayed himself in his best clothes, the other evening, and sallied forth to call on a young lady whom he met, and fell in love with at first sight, only a few days previously. He was invited into the house, and informed that Miss Mary would be down in a few minutes. Whilst sitting there conversing with Mary's mother, and wondering at the length of the "few minutes," a big dog entered without first wiping his feet on the mat, and placing his paws on the young man's knees, looking confidingly into his face. Hiram would have sooner kicked the brute's head off than to have had eleven dollars in his pocket; but he smothered his indignation, patted the animal on the head, and said, persuasively, "Good dog."

Then the canine smelled his ankles and playfully snapped at his boots, and Baxton squirmed about on his chair as if he was sitting on a pint of carpet tacks; but he kept up the martyr business admirably, and remarked in as pleasant a tone as he could assume, "Good dog—poor old fellow," and snapped his fingers encouragingly. Mary's mother said Bruno was very fond of strangers, and Hiram said "very"—and then the animal grabbed him by the veil of the limb and growled mysteriously. Then Baxton perspired profusely, and dis-regarding the eternal fitness of things, elevated himself slightly in his chair and planted the toe of his right boot in the ribs of the canine with crushing force, causing Bruno to whirl around like a top, and emit most agonizing yells. This brought things to a climax. Miss Mary, who had been employed only four hours in dressing to meet Hiram, rushed into the room in an absent-minded manner, without her panier properly adjusted, and only one check lily-white; whilst the old man, who had retired early because his bones ached so, thought only of robbers, and appeared on the scene with a marked paucity of garments, and excitedly demanded an explanation. Mary fainted, and her mother said Baxton was a horrid, nasty man to hurt the poor dog so, and Hiram looked sort of sick when he saw the old man prancing about dressed in a shirt and a shot gun, and not much else, and incontinently left without saying good night. And thus were two fond hearts and an unmannerly dog wounded by a combination of circumstances, so to speak.

"A very portly gentleman being obliged to take a trip across the country, off from the railroad route, sent his servant to the stage office to secure him two seats, so that he should not be crowded. The man soon returned, and was asked if he had executed the order, and replied that he had. "In what part of the coach are the seats?" said the gentleman. "One's on the inside of the stage, and the other is outside with the driver," said the shrewd fellow.

"When we read the cruel manner in which some husbands treat their wives, we are surprised that there are as many women as men get married. A Detroit woman wants a divorce—and should have one—because her husband insists on sleeping with his feet upon the pillow so that he can tickle her feet when she snores. If he had any love for his wife, instead of such outrageous conduct he would attach a string to her big toe and sleep in the next room.

"A ludicrous mistake happened some time ago at a funeral. The clergyman had gone on with the service, until he came to that part which says: "Our deceased brother [or sister]," without knowing whether the deceased was male or female. He turned to one of the mourners and asked whether it was a brother or sister. The man very innocently replied: "No relation at all, sir, only an acquaintance."

"The customers of a certain cooper caused him a vast deal of vexation by their saving habits and persistence in getting all their tubs and casks repaired, buying but very little work. I stood it long enough, however," he said, "until old Sam Crabtree brought me in an old bung to which he wanted a new barrel made. Then I quit the business in disgust.

"A Sioux City lady went to a gallery to have her picture taken. After putting her in position, the artist put the plate in the camera, and told her to look at a certain place on the wall. She wasn't certain of seeing it well from where she sat, and so got up and walked over to it, but failed to discover anything curious about it.

"Who dares to spit tobacco juice on this car floor?" savagely asked a burly passenger on the Mobile train. "I dare," quietly replied a slender youth, and he did it. "You're the chap I'm looking for," said the ruffian; "give me a chew."

"Which is the longest letter in the alphabet? O, because there is no end to it.
