The McBride Gold.

Nelson E. Wade, who has been sentenced to be hanged on the 6th of November by Governor Hartranft, has made a revelation recently with reference to the money which he obtained from the McBride mansion after the perpetration of the flendish double assassination which has heretofore been recorded in these col-

In a recent conversation, says the Williamsport Bulletin, Wade remarked that everything was all right now, as individuals in the city were in possession of all the gold he had secreted and that those persons had visited him in prison. Upon being questioned as to who these individuals were he replied that that was his business and he intended that it should remain a secret; he had always said that no rich man should ever get hold of it, and he had fulfilled his promise.

It will be remembered that during the session of courtat which Wade was tried he confessed to have secreted a large amount of gold near the aqueduct in Lycoming creek ; that he had several bags, one containing twenty shilling pieces, another five dollar pieces, a third ten dollar coins and the fourth twenty dollar pieces. All of these he poured into one large bag, then walked into the water and sunk the money, placing upon it three large stones. Upon search being made the stones were found in the very place described by Wade, but no bag of gold. It is now alleged or suspicioued that a bostman has become the possessor of it; that Wade, after secreting the money, repaired to a canal boat laying not far from the aqueduct and leaped upon the deck, the water dripping from his clothes; that he did not divulge anything at that time, but that after his capture he twice sent word for a certain man to Whit him. The man complied with the request, as he had been intimately acquainted with the prisoner, and from this and other facts it is conjectured that the ludividual referred to was told by Wade where he could obtain the money.

This part of the prisoner's programme car- | HAND ried out, he was free to confess where he se creted the gold, knowing full well that it had been removed, and that he had made good his word that no rich man should possess it. And now he boasts that it is in good hands, and even goes so far as to say that some of this gold has been exchanged for greenbacks, and HAND that he has been supplied with paper money obtained by the exchange. To what extent his story is correct is for the reader to determine, but it is generally believed that he secreted money near the aqueduct, and it is certain that if he did so some one was directed to the spot, or it would have remained there.

It is well known that searches were made of Wade's person, and the cell in which he was confined at that time examined in every nook and corner for money, but none could be found. The officers, after retiring, were surprised to see the prisoner present bills, and ask that certain article be purchased for him. He now states that he had in his cell a bar of soap; with a spoon he dug a hole to the centre, deposited therein the money, replaced the soap, and with his hand made a smooth surface so that it would not be observed. He takes great pleasure in relating how he fooled the officers, who thought they were smart.

Various estimates have been made as to the amount of money the M'Brides possessed, some, placing it as high as $56,000, basing their belief upon the fact that the old man, a short time before he was murdered, endeavored o persuade a gentleman living in this locality to take the farm, work it, and live upon it ; that he had about $41,000, secreted in the house, and that he could stand in the door and look out upon the spot where he had $15,000 more. He was old, and would like to have a man upon the farm in whom he could place confidence and who would assist him in case he should ever be attacked. This gentleman urged M'Bride to deposit his money in one of the Williamport banks, but the old man did not favor the idea, and replied that either himself or wife alwa stood guard, and with the guns he kept loaded he could give any plunderer a warm reception. But the sequel shows that the nurdered man was too confident of his power to protect his hoarded treasure. A board was found in the house upon which appeared a column of figures added up, and presenting a total of over $41,000. This, it is urged, coincides with the statement made by M'Bride, and demonstrates that there was secreted on the premises $56,000, the largest portion of which Wade succeeded in bringing away on that eventful afternoon and night of July 22.

Recovered Her Diamond.

Some three years ago Misses A. and A. Worswick visited Germany, and while there had a diamond pin stolen from their lodgingroom. The chief detective officers gave little encouragement as to the restoration of the property. The ladies left Germany and after visiting France returned home. After reaching this country they received a communication from Minister Washburne saying the thief had been arrested and was in prison, and the stolen property had been recovered. The Misses Worswick immediately wrote to the Whiting-Smith tourists in Europe, giving them an order to obtain the pin, and a few days ago they had the satisfaction of receiving the missing jewel from Mrs. Smith.
