A Woman's Inconstancy.

The Honesdale paper tells the following remarkable story :

"There is no doubt many in this town who remember George Caservan, who was a clerk in the Eric Company's freight office at the Union Docks in this place, in 1870. His cut was that of a regular blackleg, and he were a high hat that was only kept by the great size of his ears from hiding his head completely from view.-Clerking at a wayside station was not quite lively enough for George, and he left Honesdale for two years and sought more congenial fields. In the winter of 1872 he appeared at the Delaware House in Port Jervis, with a very attractive young woman, whom he introduced as his wife. His general appearance was so repugnant that it was the general wonder that a lady apparently so refined and so unassuming, should have chosen him for her lord. By and by the boarders noticed that he treated his wife very badly, and the circumstance beginning to be indignantly remarked upon, he made the astonishing revelation that the lady was not his wife, but the wife of an Ellenville man named Billings, whom he had induced to elope with him. This led to the couple leaving the house and the "wife" at once left the town. Caservan went back to Ellenville and told Billings what he had done, and advised him to sue for a divorce. Billings did so. The case came before Judge Barnard in Poughkeepsie. Caservan testified to his seduction and criminal relations with Mrs. Billings, with the utmost nonchalance, in open Court. On his evidence the Judge granted a decree to Billings, coupling it with a stinging rebuke to Caservan, in which he regretted that the latter was not before him for judgment instead of the woman. When Mrs. Billings heard of the divorce that had been granted, she commenced a counter prooceding and swore to such a pitiful story of her years of abuse at the hands of her husband; such neglect of herself and child that she was driven to the step which proved her ruin, that Judge Barnard revoked the decree to Billings, and granted it to Mrs. Billings instead, assigning the child to other parties. Billings returned to Ellenville, and the divorced wife went to Syracuse, where her parents lived, and obtained employment. Caservan, meantime had returned to Port Jervis, and sought his living by keno and bluff. He obtained a boarding place at the house of Mrs. George Elmendorf, a young, rosy and buxom lady, whose husband recently embarked on a whaling voyage, to be gone three years .-Caservan in a short time so got control over Mrs. Elmendorf that he actually induced her to sell her household goods, break up her home and elope with him. They took the Erie train for the west, and Mrs. Elmendorf has not been heard from since. Caservan, however, after squandering what money she had, deserted her somewhere in the west, and turned up again the past summer in Port Jervis, as a prize soap and three card-monte swindler.

Last spring Billings and his divorced wife accidently met in Syracuse. Singular as it may seem, they reconciled the past, and were re-married, and soon after removed to Pine Bush, Orange co., N. Y. Here they lived together peaceably enough until last month. There was a pic-nic at Middletown, which Caservan attended with his swindling games. Mrs. Billings an illustration of a woman's inconsistency and fickleness almost unparalleled. Caservan prevailed upon Mrs. Billings to again fly with him, and they went to a hotel in one of the small towns about Middletown. Here they lived for some time. Caservan had as an assistant in his confidence games a young man, whose name we do not know, but who was really a fine looking fellow, and possessed abilities of better application. He brought his wiles in turn to bear upon the susceptible heart of Mrs. Billings, and the result was she deserted Caservan and "went west" with his associate, leaving both him and Billings to chew the bitter end of contentment, or "cuss their luck," as they see fit

The Story of a Bag of Gold.

The Kansas City Times, of November 5, says : On the west side of the street leading down from the Bluff street bridge to the Union Depot, in Kansas City, stands a small frame house, which, before the street was graded up, stood upon props, or stilts. It is called the "Texas and Colorado Saloen." This bouse has had a board nailed upon it for some time, upon which is painted "House and Furniture for Sale." A few days ago a stranger entered the house, and after a brief conversation with Louis Mezzadre, the old Frenchman owning the saloon, concluded to purchase, and yesterday afternoon called upon the proprietor with witnesses to consummate the trade. The terms of the trade were these : The purchaser, Mr. Clew, was to pay Mezzadre $700 in cash for the house and all it contained, with the exception of Mezzadre's trunk and his clothing. This agreement was repeated over in the presence of witnesses, and the sale affected, and the money paid over. It was now that the strange and singular part of the transaction took place. The owner asked for a hatchet, and before any one could imagine what he was about to do he walked to a certain place in the wall, known only to himself, and proceeded to chop away the plastering, and in a short time dragged from behind the broken lath and plaster a bag of gold containing $6,000. Before the crowd present could realize what was the matter, or how this strange discovery had been made, the strange man had gotten on board of the eastern bound North Missouri train, then leaving the depet, and started East. The question naturally suggests itself, whose money was it? Who put it there, and how did the strange man know of it? It is one of the most singular transactions in real estate ever brought to public notice in Kansas City.

Since the above has been written it has been discovered that the old Frenchman had gold and silver sufficient stored away in a keg beneath the house to purchase the finest residence in Kansas City. An old servant states that the old miser had brought this gold and silver with him from Texas, where he had accumulated it suddenly and in a most mysterious manner. Some say he obtained it on the Mexican frontier; others assert it was the result of several years' trading among the Indians. But wherever he obtained it be succeeded in keeping his treasure a secret and paid taxes upon none of it. He is now on his way to France.

The Whipping Post. New Castle, Del., December 10.—The parties found guilty of an attempt to rob the Bank of Delaware at Wilmington, on the 7th of November, were publicly whipped here to-day. The gates of the prison yard were thrown open at about 10:30, and Carter and Hope were place in the pillory. Both bore this part of their sentence with great equanimity, and seemed in no way disturbed, remarking as they were released from their uncomfortable position, that they hoped that Delaware law had been satisfied so far. At 11:27 Lawler and Hurlburt were brought out and sent to the stocks. The first named seemed a trifle excited, but Hurlburt treated the whole affair as a good joke. By this time a numerous crowd, estimated at from 3,500 to 5,000 people, had collected around the prison, making frantic efforts to gain a glimpse of the two now undergoing the punishment. After Hurlburt and Lawler had been returned to their cells, the most important, because the most disgraceful portion of their punishment, the whipping, was commenced. The first man brought out was Carter, who received his forty lashes with stolid indifference, and who released from the post, walked firmly and proudly back to the jail. Hurlburt was next chained to the stocks, and took his punishment bravely. The next man, Lawler, was brought forth white and nervous, but did not flineh, and looked defiantly upon the multitude as they jeered upon him. He probably suffered more than either of the others who had preceded him. Hurlburt received the forty lashes in the same characteristic manner which he had exhibited on the pillory, seeming to care little for any portion of the sentence. The excitement over the affair is simply wonderful. An extra train, mainly filled with noted Philadelphians was run from Wilmington and came over about eleven o'clock. All the Philadelphia and most of the New York papers are represented.
