

rows are struck out with the plow about three feet distant, and the seed is covered with a good depth of soil. A roller over the ground, leveling and smoothing the surface, to be followed in a short time by the spike harrow. As soon as the young plants appear above the ground, the cultivator is started and kept going frequently throughout the growing season. Every weed is pulled up as soon as it makes its appearance ; for, to use his own expression, he is "too poor to grow weeds." As the plants wax strong, slight furrows are thrown up to them with a small plow, and these are still further increased afterward by a repetition of the same process. In digging, great care is taken not to skin or bruise the tubers, but to handle them all carefully, and this enables the owner to promptly filled. preserve them much better than the careless farmer who throws his potatoes about as if they were cobble stones. This is the only magic he employs. Careful choice of seed, thorough preparation of the soil, fre-quent stirring of the surface and total ex-tinction of weeds—these are the secret of diis success.

a correspondent of the Country Gentleman, writing of a good pasture, says :

When the timber is first cleared off and the stumps burned enough to prevent sprouting, sow grass seed, if the ground is pot already stocked, and after the grass is well-rooted, turn in the sheep and cattle and let the pasture take care of itself. The stumps will never need to be dug out at a large expense. They will gradually rot s large expense. They will gradually rot and add to the fertility of the soil. The large mass of decayed leaves and roots in the soil is left undisturbed and will keep the grass luxuriant for a generation. If the animals pastured leave all their manure upon the soil, and especially if sheep be kept, the pasture will improve rather than run down. The sheep distribute the ma-nure all over the pasture, and if there is any excess it is upon the hill tops where they usually spend the night. They also keep down weeds and brush.
