Pennsylvania man. Mr. Lick is the son of a plain Lebanon farmer, was born in a one-story house common in the country in those days, seven miles from the town of Lebanon, and bred a farmer's boy. During the gold excitement of 1849, Mr. Lick, like many others, wended his way to the Pacific slope in search of a fortune. Unlike many of his fellows he succeeded beyond expectations. A few years ago Mr.

Lick had the old house in which he was born shipped by rail to his Pacific home,

and there set up on his farm, and furnished as of old, a wonder to curiosity-seekers.

Mr. Lick's fortune was made in lucky

In the era that closed with the great panic there was a considerable class of men like Ames, who reared up what seemed to be colossal fortunes in manufactures, and railroads and mining, but lost their heads and became bankrupt suddenly to the utter consternation of the public. Three years ago none but an invetorate croaker would have predicted the failure of A. & W. Sprague, Ames Brothers, Jay Cook & Co., Henry Clews and a number of others who went down as before the blast of a tempest.

passed down to him through generations of royal chieftains. When the remains were to be placed into the coffin, and were removed from the feather robe on which they had lain in state, his aged father commandthat the body be buried in the robe, as the dead king, his son, was the last of the family and to him, therefore, it belonged. It will cost more than $100,000 to replace this robe, if it ever is replaced, for one million of birds, possessed of rare red and yellow plumage, were caught to furnish the material of which it was made.

137 At Philadelphia a few days since a man giving the name of Henry Richard Tyson, and having in his possession a valice containing $2,300 in gold and coins, was taken in charge at the New York depot by a police officer who had observed him wandering listlessly about the place.-Tyson states that he arrived in New York from Jamaica, where he was a planter, on Saturday last. He remained at the Astor house until Wednesday, when he came to Philadelphia and remained over night at a hotel near the depot but became alarmed at the noises early in the morning, and quitted the house he returned to the depot where he was found.

IT One day last week a professional gambler went into a faro room in Chicago to play an engagement with the tiger. He commenced playing, lost, won, lost again, continued losing ; and finally, at the end of fifty hours he ceased playing, being then out of pocket to the amount of $11,-900. During this session of fifty hours the game was unbroken. The gambler never slept for a moment, never stopped to eat a meal, but carried the whole tremendous enterprise through without rest, cessation or refreshment.

For the Bloomfield Times. SANDY HILL, June 17, 1874. A hot Days' Experience—Big Snapper-The Deacon in Trouble.

The Deacon in Trouble. One day some three weeks since, about 2 o'clock P. M., when the heat was 90 in the shade, two Medical Students might have been seen reclining on the grass, in the shade of the trees that surrounds Dr. Rodgers' Med. Office, at Sandy Hill. The one held in his hand the last system of Groose's Surgery, while the other was bothering over a work on Chemistry. The first to break the silence was Mr. A. R. R.——, surnamed the "Deacon," who hintly sourcaked, "old fellow lets go swimfaintly squeaked, "old fellow lets go swim-ming." "All right" was the reply that came from the lips of the other, whose name we need not mention here, and so they were soon on their way to indulge in they were soon on their way to indulge in one of the most pleasant past-times of summer. As they were crossing a small stream, the "Deacon" suddenly yelled a snapping turtle, and instantly fainted. The other chap landed the "old snapper" in double-quick, and then proceeded to awaken his comrade out of syncope, by holding that snapper in close relation to the chaptene maximus muscle of the "Dea holding that snapper in close relation to the glutacus maximus muscle of the "Deacon." They then proceeded on their jour-ney to the creek, holding the snapper at arms length, while the enraged Brute snapped at everything within reach not forgetting the "Descon's" one inferior ex-tremity, which he nabbed and relieved the now irate "Descon" of both spunk and blood. But to proceed, having arrived at the bathing grounds, the next trouble was, what to do with the spunky old snapper, while in bathing. However, they both came to the conclusion, that "where there is a will, there is a way," but the way was not visible to them yet; at last the "Dea-con" looked wise, and said he guessed he knew of a way to stop his infernal traveling while in asymming. So he set down on a But to proceed, having arrived at while in awimming. So he set down grass plot and pulled off a boot, looked like an inverted canal boat. So he set down on a that He then divested hiroself of his unmentiona-ables; tied the legs shut, and then proceed-ed to chuck the snapper in, and fastening them shut at the top, completely confining his "snappership." The "Deacon" all this time, was as calm and serene as (Geo. Washington was the night he crossed the Delaware, when the fate of a nation rested on his shoulders,) and certainly the fate of on his another is,) and certainly die strength of the old anapper rested on the strength of them breeches, and well he knew it too, for the way the old chap did rear and pitch, was simply awfol. All the while just as quiet a smile played around the "Dea-con's" month, as ever bedecked the visage of Leff Daris when University act a hold of con's" month, as ever bedecked the visage of Jeff Davis, when Unionists got a hold of him in Dixie. But to proceed, after being in the water an hour or more, they came out to prepare to go home. It was then that the work began. The old snapper just clinched on to the internal posterior portion of that garment, and there he hung, let go he would not, and to go home without that necessary article, was not to be thought of. If the "Deacon" was calm before, he was not now. He said, con-

twist that snapper ; shoot him ; kick him, After working balf an hour, the snapper let loose and came out, much to the "Dea-cons" delight. He, however, was finally recaptured and taken home where he will get into a worse sorape before long. The parties are doing well, but the "Deacon" says he will never accommodate a turtle of that description in such departments again. The "Deacon" also says, when the suap-per clinched him by the leg, it "painfully" reminded him of Aunt Jemimas Plaster, the more he tried to pull that critter of, the more he stuck the faster. S. R. It is this: There are entirely too many vagabonds in the shape of "beggars," running through our land. In the winter time they manage to get into our Poor House, to lay there all win-ter, but as soon as Spring comes, when there may be something for them to do, they leave there and roam the country over begging their way as they go. They are not always reliable either. People who live along the public highway are often bothered with them a great deal. If they should refuse them something to eat, or a place to sleep, and should tell them to go and earn their living by work, instead of roaming through the land, they may seek revenge by burning their buildings. Last Spring, a year since, four of this kind of people came through our part of the coun-try and asked for lodgings. Not getting any they found their way through a win-dow in a school house, near this place, burnt all the wood, candles and matches that were in the house ; they also performed some other tricks which are too shameful to mention here. The trustees of the estate of Oakes Ames have been obliged to put it into bankruptcy, declaring at the same time that if properly managed the assets will meet all the obligations. He was the organizer and manager of the notorious Credit Mobilier, into which he inveigled a score of leading Congressmen, only to betray them at last and blast their reputations. If he had been a mere lobby agent or adventurer the case would not have been so bad. But he was one of the most extensive manufacturers in New England, and was reputed to be worth nine millions. He was one of the very few men who rendered possible the building of the Union Pacific Railroad at the time when no one had any faith in it. At that time it was regarded as a wonderful exhibition of personal energy. But underneath it lay this Credit Mobilier, through which Ames and his associates took the contracts and reaped immense profits without putting in any money, the government lands furnishing the working capital.

The success of the enterprise was such a tremendous streak of luck that it seems to diug the country of the bands of outlaws have turned Ames' head completely. He went into building railways and cities in all the wild places of the west and south, and at last became bankrupt. But it was believed that the firm could be put on its legs again, and every effort has been made to that end. 137 Little Joe was the medicine man of a tribe of Indians near Big Pine, California. Sapsey had a fever, and Little Joe killed him in a clumsy effort to cure him. The tribe were indignant at the malpractice, and as a punishment dosed Little Joe with the medicine that had killed Sapsey. But the doctor did not die of his own physic. Then he was stoned and stabbed to death. Four of the tribe bave been arrested for the murder. They confess the deed, but do not regard it as a crime, arguing that any doctor who cannot cure ought to be put to death.
