

A Battle between an Elephant and a Rhinoceros.

A Terrible Fight.

The Indianapolis Herald relates the following: "Last week, as the mammoth fleet of steamers employed to transport old John Robinson's great world exposition approached the landing at Wyandotte, situated on the banks of the Ohio river, in Western Virginia, an unusual commotion was observed on board the flagship Erie, No. 9. Men, women and children were wildly running to and fro frantically shouting to the other steamers, while at the same time there arose a series of shrieks, screeches, yells and howls, as if all the inmates of pandemonium were being let loose.

"The good people on shore were unable to make out the meaning and strange behavior of those on the steamers, but surmising that everything was not right among the animals in the menagerie they very quickly concluded that the open levee was no place for them, should any of the ferocious monsters make their way to land and quickly fled to their homes. In the meantime Commodore John F. Robinson hoisted signals of distress, which were quickly responded to by the steamer Champion, Captain G. N. Robinson, and also the steamer Argosy, Captain James Robinson, who ranged alongside the Erie, and were informed that an awful battle was raging between the huge double horned rhinoceros and the monster war elephant, Old Emperor. The ladies and children were quickly transferred to the steamers Champion and Argosy, and then the entire crews of the three steamers armed themselves and went below to endeavor to separate the combatants.

"As they reached that portion of the main deck just off the boilers, a horribly sickening sight met their view. Wounded, bleeding and horribly lacerated men were lying where they had been stricken down by the terrible brutes; dead, wounded and dying horses and ponies strewed the deck in every direction; cages destroyed and literally mashed into fragments were scattered among the dead, wounded, dying, and the terrible din, shrieks, grunts and groans plainly told them that the battle was still fiercely raging. A total destruction of almost every cage on the boat seemed imminent. All efforts proved unavailing to separate the savage denizens of the forest. At this juncture a loud crash was heard and the two cages containing the monster sea lions and the Labrador seals were driven overboard.

"The veteran showman was as cool and collected as it was possible for a man to be under these circumstances, when his property was going to destruction every moment by thousands of dollars. Not so, however, with Manager John F. Robinson, Jr., for when he saw his favorites, sea lions and seals, being dashed overboard without mercy he said: 'Boys I can't stand this any longer, and we might as well try to kill one of these brutes before they ruin every cage on the boat.' He then gave orders to fire upon them, and a heavy volley was discharged, which had no more effect on the now thoroughly aroused and frightened monsters than to cause them to fight with more fury than before. The situation was getting each moment more dangerous for all on board, and the proprietors were in despair of all hope, when it occurred to Manager John F. Robinson to open the steam pipes and deluge them with steam.

"The engineer quickly turned on the steam, and as it suddenly escaped from the boilers with a terrific roar, a shrill trumpeting screech was heard from the elephant, such as they always utter in crying for mercy when conquered in their native wilds. Whether the animal had received its death blow from the rhinoceros or was frightened into submission by the steam, could not be ascertained until it cleaved away, which it did in a few moments, disclosing to the astonished gaze of the showmen a curious and at the same time gratifying sight. There lay the huge elephant upon the deck, cowering trembling down, uttering moans of pain and fright, while a little beyond was the rhinoceros snugly ensconced in his cage, quaking and shivering with fear, where he had retreated the instant the steam was upon him. The attendants sprang quickly forward and closed the door of his cage, thus securing themselves from further molestation from him.

"Five horses were found killed, as also were three ponies, and four more were so badly maimed and wounded, that they were killed in mercy, to end their suffering."

Foot Cut off by a Mowing Machine. From a private source we learn that an old man named McGough, a farmer residing near Derry station, had his right foot cut off at a point near the ankle, whilst engaged in driving two horses attached to a mowing machine. Getting up off his seat he stepped forward to strike the horses with a whip, and as he attempted to step back once again his foot came in contact with the mowing knife and was completely cut off. The unfortunate old man was immediately conveyed to his home, which was close at hand, and medical aid summoned.— Altoona Tribune.

THE AMENITIES OF LITERATURE. It may not be known to the general reader that the absence of an international copyright, the American publisher, who first announces and issues a foreign book is by common consent of the trade, allowed an undisturbed right to publish said book as though he held a copyright. This excellent rule is sometimes broken, however, and then rival publishers are "set by the ears" and retaliation is the order of the day. Just now, the book trade is exercised over the failing out between Scribner, Armstrong & Co., of New York, and Henry L. Shepard & Co., successors to Shepard & Gill of Boston. The cause of their misunderstanding is set forth in the following letter from the Boston to the New York house.

Messrs. Scribner, Armstrong & Co. GENTLEMEN:—We were surprised to see by the papers, this morning, that you had announced a $1.00 edition of "The Three Russians and Three Englishmen," by Jules Verne. We say surprised, for we had supposed that no house in the trade so carefully observed its courtesies. "Three Englishmen," etc., which our translator calls "Adventures in the Land of the Behemoth," and which yours entitles "Meridiana," was undertaken by us after careful inquiry of the leading jobbing houses and of publishers. We found that no one had issued or announced it. No lack of care or courtesy can therefore be charged to us. We have proceeded in good faith, and trust you will withdraw your announcement and thereby respect the courtesy which we publishers have agreed to, because like brother Osgood's author, we wish to lead a "Life under glass." Please reply by return mail. Respectfully, HENRY L. SHEPARD & CO.

The New York house having taken no notice of this letter, Messrs. H. S. & Co., make beligerent announcement in our columns, and everything promises a vigorous "battle of books."—Boston Daily Globe.
