

A LUCKY INVENTOR.

A Millionaire at 25, by an Acute Ear.

Not long ago the papers of the country were filled with accounts of the steamer Faraday and the new cable she was landing on the coast of New Hampshire. This calls to mind the history of a young journalist of Washington, and I repeat it as of interest. The young man referred to came to Washington soon after the close of the war to correspond for the Chicago Post and Albany Journal. He was very young and inexperienced, but a good telegraph operator. Failing to secure the news he wanted by personal observation and investigation he adopted a method which was as novel as it was successful. He could read the Morse alphabet by sound. This was his stock in trade. Upon it he operated, and for months was recognized as one of the most clever and entertained news-gatherers at the Capital. And all without any labor on his part. He would rise late, stroll down to the capitol about noon (just when the other correspondents were sending off their despatches), wander into the telegraph office, listen to the click of the wires, and then write and send a telegram containing all the important items the other men had gathered. It was easily done and eminently successful. Complaint was made of him, but it was unavailing.

He overreached, however, and fell. The Washington Treaty was being considered in executive session of the senate. The doors and windows were closed; but no thing could hinder our hero. He climbed to the top of the building, crept over the Senate chamber, and lying flat on his face short-handed every word of the treaty as it came from the lips of the clerk and arose to the ceiling. He sold it to the New York Tribune. The New York Times correspondent was angry, and exposed him and his papers dismissed him.

Unwilling to be idle, he set his active brains at work inventing telegraph instruments. When the French cable had been laid he had been commissioned to report the event. He boarded the cable ship and watched the operations of the telegraphers. The method was this: A needle, like that of a compass, swung on a pivot. The current of electricity coming over the wire moved it to the right or left. A deviation to the right meant a dot; to the left a dash. Thus the Morse alphabet was used. The movements of the needle were so slight that a mirror of great magnifying power was necessary for its profitable reading. Even then but fifteen words could be communicated in a minute.

Our hero thought that he could do better. So, as I said, he set his wits to work, and, after two years' hard labor, has just produced his machine. By it he can take fifty words a minute, or more than three times the number that could be received by the old process. A company of New York capitalists has been formed to operate the patent, and our hero is a millionaire, and but twenty-five years old.

A $150,000 Fee.

The son and heir of the late Edwin Stevens, Mr. John G. Stevens, although he is a possessor of almost unlimited wealth, being worth some $75,000,000; has, until very lately, been a most unhappy man. He has been afflicted since his birth with a peculiar wen, which has increased year by year until it covered a large portion of his face and neck. It was a most unpleasant object, being covered with hair, and strange resembled an animal. No man could see it without a shudder, and ladies have fainted at the sight of it. Of course Mr. Stevens felt the affliction most keenly, and it had, naturally enough, a most depressing effect upon his spirits. What was his immense wealth to him? Any workman in his employ was more to be envied than he. He became morose and almost melancholy; society that he was exceedingly fond of he studiously avoided, and, although a young man, he became almost a recluse. The best physicians and surgeons of Europe were consulted but they all said that to remove the wen could but result in his death. Although his life was so miserable still there was hope, and he bore bravely up against repeated disappointments. Deliverance came at last, and a few days ago an operation was performed which has made him a new man. Dr. William Parker, of New York City, had faith to believe that the wen could be removed. He told Mr. Stevens so, and the young man, grasping at the straw promised $150,000 if he would perform the operation successfully. He did so, and has earned the everlasting gratitude, as well as the money, of the young millionaire who is now pronounced out of danger. The operation was performed with electric knives, and it is said that when the horrid tumor was removed, the skin beneath was so sound and smooth as that of any part of the body. Notwithstanding the cloud that has hung over his whole life, the young man has had his love affair, like the rest of us. In early youth he was betrothed to a little girl, the daughter of one of his father's dearest friends, who always loved him, and sorrowed his affliction. While the hateful thing was upon him, it is said, Mr. Stevens, gave up all idea of being married, but now that it has been removed, we shall expect soon to hear of a great wedding festivities at Hoboken.
