I WOULD FORGET. BY RICHARD FULTON. Oh! bid me not recall the past. Too many joys with it have fled; And many hopes, which once were bright.

THE JUDGE'S DAUGHTER.

So sad is my story, and so true, that it seems branded in my memory in letters of fire. It is no story conjured up by the imagination, nor yet one that needs glossing over by a fertile pen.

Not many years ago a haughty old man, a judge of incorruptible morals, died, leaving behind him two children. After his death it was found that he had not been so wealthy as many had imagined, yet rich enough to leave each daughter a moderate competence.

To the eldest sister descended the homestead and a sufficient income to keep up some of their former style; the younger twenty thousand dollars, invested in an old and trusty bank. From infancy Estella, the eldest, had been acquainted with a poor but proud spirited boy.

But the old judge demurred. No daughter of his should encourage the attentions of a penniless youth—their intimacy must cease. Obedient as a child, she listened to her father's commands, and obeyed them implicitly.

He surrounded her with gay company; he did everything that wealth or taste could suggest to win her mind away from her boy lover. But though she uttered no complaint, he knew that she did not forget.

At last he died. He did not bind her with any promises. Perhaps in death his eyes discovered that it needs more than wealth to bring happiness. After her bereavement, Rupert Kingsland came to her again.

"Estella, my love," he said passionately; "I could not keep away from you longer. It may seem wrong to you for me to come to you, now he is gone, when I know how much he was opposed to me, but darling you are in trouble, and I must comfort you!"

How many hearts congenial true, And forms, too fair, too frail to last. And sunny smiles, and founted scenes, Sleepers cast accompany the 3.10 a. m. train, without change.

THE N. Y. TRIBUNE.

Through struggle and suffering, at the cost of multiform agonies, bereavements, devastations, the American flag embodied in the preamble to our fathers' Declaration of Independence approaches its complete realization.

Two weeks past, and they numbered three. Then a note came, which commenced as follows: "My dear friend, I feel as if I can say to you, through a note, that which I wish to say, better than face to face."

She read no more. Some one in the adjoining room heard a heavy fall, and rushed in. They found her on the floor, apparently dead. They picked her up; and sent for a physician.

On the first night after he returned from Europe, Mary Morse gave a party. She made her brother promise to watch Dr. Kingsland, and bring him up with him.
