There is no greater mistake a young man can commit, than that of being judifferent to the interest of his employer. It must be admitted that there are circumstances under which it would seem to be almost impossible o feel an interest in an emp'oyer's business; but for all that, it is worth a trial. Be faithful in small things, be attentive to your duties, shirk no employment that is not dishonorable. feel that your employer is fairly entided to every minute of the time which you have agreed to give him tor a stipulated remuneration. The wages may be small-too small-but if you have contracted to work for a dollar a week, when your work is worth ten, stick to your bargain like a man until your term of service has expired. It may seem very hard, but it will instil the great principle of being true to your word. Such faithfulness will not fail to impress an employer favorably, and when that point finds that he has an apprentice who is honest and capable, will not readily dispense with his services.
