

THE POST.

MIDDLEBURG, MARCH 4, 1872

Philadelphia Prison Sketches.

Feeling a tap on my shoulder, I turned and encountered a pair of dilated, lurid eyes glaring fiercely into mine, while a waft of gutterably emanating and fetid breath swept down my lungs. He was of the medium stature, with narrow, bony, best-over shoulders, one of which was higher than the other; thin, quivering lips, and damp, long-nailed fingers.

"He is a morphia eater and clairvoyant," said the keeper, laying his cold, clammy hands on my head.

The forehead of events said, in grave, oracular tones: There is a great forest filled with singing birds, of feathered many hues and tints. The soft murmur of spilling brooklets and rocky, bountiful falls make musical the performed air. Soft nature revolves from her mystic, awful depths, a tone of pink white light that whirled round me in eccentric waves. To the spirit, the gross and earthly vanish. The spirit of my dead mother smokes sadly down on me. Her eyes are wet with tears shed for her unhappy son. Behind and before her I behold the spirit of Moses, with Donatista on his left hand and Sir William Jenner on his right. All is over. Once more— is mortal." Lowering his eyes from their ecstatic, upward gaze, he said: "Have you any morphia or opium?"

"I shook my head; he uttered an oath and slumped quickly away.

He was from Lucknow, an officer in the British army; fought a duel with his brother-in-law and killed him; was afterward attacked by jungle fever and recovered only to be a lunatic. Even before his illness he was somewhat of a spiritist and believer in mesmerism and Jackson Davis; now he is perfectly mad on the subject.

Here comes a venerable old stoner, who will quote scripture to you while he is stealing your peck; think if you are not careful.

Turning my eyes in the direction signified, I observed an aged, white-haired, portly man, decked with gaudy ribbons and tokens of every description. He was striding theatrically toward me, holding open before him a ponderous edition of the Bible. Hounding a pair of silver-rimmed spectacles, which imparted to his grave, impressive features an air of almost oppressive solemnity, he began to read from the opening chapters of St. John.

I listened in silent and devout attention, he meanwhile edging closer to my side. Suddenly I felt a hand pressing on my ribs, and the mirror after I clutched the old fellows fingers, and to my intense amusement discovered that he had secured both my gold eye glasses and a twenty-five cent stamp. Holding in front of his immovable face the gully, fat fingers, I indignantly exclaimed: "No, you are too inconsistent; keep the money, but give me my glasses!"

The keeper laughed outright, while the aged stoner, surveying me with suppressed savor, retreated to his chamber, retaining the twenty-five cent stamp.

"He is a kleptomaniac," explained the keeper, and has been for 25 years a source of great shame and mortification to his friends and family, but he is now where there is but little to steal and what he does pawn in is restored every month or so to the rightful owners. We make a raid on his drawers, closets and pockets, and it is really astonishing what an amount of odds and ends he manages to secure in the course of a month.

AN INVOLUNTARY HIGHWAYMAN.— On a recent evening, a Bookkeeper was walking along Atlantic Avenue, when he was jostled and passed by a stranger. Soon afterward, discovering that his watch was gone, he hurried after the stranger, presented a revolver at his head and gruffly said, "Give me that watch." The stranger "flunked out" at once. On reaching home the gentleman began telling the story of his adventures to his wife, when she interrupted him by saying, "Why, John, you left your watch on the bureau this morning, and I have been wearing it all day!"

A man in Memphis, desiring to see the Grand Duke, took off his coat, and carried a large Saratoga trunk on his shoulders up stairs, thus evading the police, who had strict orders to keep all strangers out of the Peabody House. After carrying a two hundred pound trunk up two flights of stairs, he didn't see the Grand Duke, and found somebody had stolen his coat.

A demure-looking chap hailed a charcoal peddler with the query, "Have you got charcoal in your wagon?" "Yes, sir," said the expectant driver, stopping his horse. "That's right," observed the demure chap, with an approving nod; "always tell the truth and people will respect you." And he hurried on much to the regret of the peddler, who was getting out of the wagon to look for a brick.

"THE MORNING GLORY," Mills' Patent Improved Brass COAL STOVE.

In the pattern of the Morning Glory, several sizes and improvements have been embodied, which cannot be seen in any other. This new stove is made of cast iron, so fitted as to be light, but can be made with sheet-iron upper section when preferred by the purchaser. Its construction is so designed, that it will burn any size of wood, and is by its own construction, though resembling some of the former patterns of the Morning Glory, is a great improvement, making it more desirable than any other stove in the market. The arrangement of the grate and the fully opening the most complete made in this country.

Among the many advantages in the use of the Morning Glory are the following:— 1. Continuous draught. 2. Quality of the heat. 3. Ventilation through the grate. 4. Anti-rust stove. 5. No waste of gas. 6. Economy of fuel.
