The toughuess of an alligator's hide se only to be equalled by the tough-ness of the stories told about him. A correspondent of the New York Sun, writing from Florida, tells the follow-

While I was at lake Jessop, I west gator hunting with Judge Em west 'gator hunting with Judge Em mons, of Jacksonville. We found a twelve foot alligator sleeping on the top of the water about twenty feet from the shore, near a small grove of palmettoes. The Judge put a rifle ball directly through the alligator's ball directly through the alligator's akuil. The ball made a terrible hole The 'pator was as dead as a mackerel. We eliped a rope round his shoulders and towed him gahore. While the 'solume, has now over Seventy-Five Thomsand and towed him gahore. While the 'volume, has now over Seventy-Five Thomsand and towed him gahore. While the The 'pator was as dead as a mackerel. We sliped a rope round his shoulders and towed him eshore. While the monster lay in the water, and while we were dehaving how we would get his head off. I jabbed a stick through the bullet hole down into the brain. A colored man who was passing by said: "Boss you done be careful with that ah ah gaitah. He no done gove dead yet. You better stick your knife in the fore paw to see if he be dead. Re done you some mischief, Boss, sush, if he be no dead." I took my knife out of its sleenth and ran it into the aligator's fore paw. The into the aligator's fore paw. The monster lashed the water with his thin tail, almost knocking the Judge UNION PLANING MILL! into the lake, and nearly putting out my eyes. When I recovered my eyesight I saw the Judge, but not the aligner. The animal had sailed Keely & Wagner off, stick and all, and left no tract behind him. Alligators frequently fill their stomachs with ducks. They find the spots Boors, in the marshes where the ducks huddie together at night and make a de-scent upon them. Frequently, while flocks of great fat raft ducks are swimming in the deepest part of a river or lake an alligator will glide under the ducks and select these that suit him best. They are drawn under the water so quietly that the flock is not startled for some time, and the alligator maunges to secure a square meal before his doings are suspected.
