United Kingdom, and upon a volume of mineral statistics, published by Robert Hunt, F. R. S., and Keeper of Miolog Records, we extract some futeresting data.

The probable amount of coal contained in the ascertained cash fields of Great Britain is 90,207 millions of tons. It is further estimated, but not known, that under the Permian and New Red Sandstone lie other strats to the amount to the amount of 56,273 millions of tons. As to the consumption of coal, in 1857 it was 65 millions of tons; is 1859, 72 million increase will continue in very much the same ratio, but even at the figures of 1871 the known supply would last but 770 years.

But the most interesting information which comes from an examination ica, with its 560,000 square miles of coal supply, is to be the great future resource of the world, but that against England the balance in the coal and iron trade is already turning in our favor. As prices increased in Great Britain, the production of our own iron and coal has increased. Particularly bave the years 1871 and '72 ex-1872 we received from England 88,430 tons of iron rails, while in the first two months of this year we took but 48,962 tons—an increase of the second seco hibited great energy in both departs but 48,902 tons-an increase of home will mrke still more rapid. In fact, it has recently come to light," says the Review, "that in the English Market iron is £3 per ton dearer than in the American market.

times of poor leather, we should clean and oil the harness at least once a year, to keep it in good condition, and to reduce the wear and tear as much as possible. Don't let the job out to the harness maker, but some of these stormy days when the harness is not in use just take it into the work-shop and commence operations. Take the harness all apart, and scrape off all scurf, hairs and dirt, and wash the leather clean with soap and hot water. Then heat two or three quarts of neats foot oil in a long, shallow pan, and draw each piece of leather through it slowly, bending the leather backwards and forwards, and rubbing the oil in with a cloth or sponge. Hang near the fire to dry, and repeat the process until the leather is saturated with oil, mix a little lampblack with clean tallow, and a cloth rub it into the leather while warm, until the pores than are tilled, and the surface becomes smooth and glossy. If harness is oiled in this way it is never gummy, and will therefore keep clean a love. and will therefore keep clean a long Sometimes linseed oil or adulterated oils are used. but they dry on leather and make it gummy, dirt and hairs stick to it and the harness gets so filthy as to soil everything it touches. After the harness has had a good oiling, an occasion-al rubbing with tallow and lampblack will keep the leather tough and pliable, and prevent it from cracking .-
