Poetry. The Footsteps of Decay. Oh, let the cool sea slumber hark, Above its waves, and awake To see how soon Life in its gurgles, glides away, And the worn features of decay Come stealing on.

Let not vain hope deceive the mind, No happy lot is here attained To merit such a day; Our golden dreams of youth were bright, Like those the present shall delight - Like those decay.

Let us vain hope deceive the mind, No happy lot is here attained To merit such a day; Our golden dreams of youth were bright, Like those the present shall delight - Like those decay.

First Battle of the Revolution. The battle of Concord on the 19th of April, 1775, was the first contest in the struggle for American independence, and in view of the approaching Centennial, every event of that important period has a special interest.

The British, somewhat scattered in small groups on the bridge and on the west bank of the river, noticing the advances of the Americans, immediately formed and crossed the east bank, taking up some of the planks of the bridge as they passed.

Over the remainder of the road the British were driven before the Americans like sheep, and had to run the gauntlet. It was a race for life with them. The highway was lined with Americans, who as they came aimed generally produced the desired result.

The Lapse of Time. It is only by looking back through the vista of a past we realize how swiftly time passes. Not many thoughts will press upon us as a portion of the natural joys of our nature, for we cannot forget that time is but the illusion between one fixed and another. How rapidly these years run through their course and vanish, while time seems to be retrograde.
