Its quares. ds and its strife,
And I fain in be grave would be lying.
If death was the end of life.
The friends that I loved and cherished Have failed me one by one, And my loved ones too have vanished Like the mist before the Sun.

I once bad a darling companion, With eyes that were dark and deep;
But coldly the death shades descended,
And she felt 'mid the shadows asleep.
I once loved a beautiful flowret.
That gay in the garden smiled.
But the winter's chill breath touched it,
And it faded, and droop'd and died.

Bach thing that I loved and cherished Passed from me soonest of all, Had now all that's nearest and dearest, I dare not love at all.
The robbins sing in the morning.
And the lillies dance in the breeze,
That whisperingly tosses the try,
And coquets with the laughing trees.

But into my heart steal no echoes,—
The masic of life has fied;
The joys of my childhood are ended,
And the hopes of my youth are dead,
And I'm weary, weary of waiting.
And fain would I lie down to sieep,
Where the grass in the churchyard is way-

And the willows forever weep.

An article in the Herald of Health says that one of the earliest efforts made to obtain anything like a fixed relation between hight and weight was that of Dr Boyed, who weighed a number of inmates of the St. Marybone. Workhouse. England He took the height and weight of one hundred and eight persons laboring under consumption, and found that they averaged fire feet and seven inches; in height and sixty pounds in weight.

He them measured and weighed one hundred and forty one pangers who were not consumptive, and found that their average height was five feet three inches, and that their average height was five feet three inches, and that their average height was five feet three inches, and that their average height was five feet three inches, and that their average height was five feet three inches, and that their average height was five feet three inches, and that their average height was five feet three inches, and that their average height was five feet three inches, and that their average height was five feet three inches, and that their average height was five feet three height and weight of all classes of persons in this community.
