The Inauguration.

The city of Washington was crowded on Monday the 5th inst., to witness the inauguration of President elect Hayes.

At eleven o'clock the President and the late President accompanied by two members of the committee of arrangements, proceeded in a carriage to the east door of the north wing of the Capitol and entering there, proceeded to the President's room.

The Vice President-elect was accompanied to the Capitol by a member of the committee of arrangements, and conducted to the Vice President's room, and after the oath of office was administered to him by the Vice President.

The diplomatic corps assembled in the Marble room, and thence proceeded in a body to the Senate chamber.

The diplomatic corps and the justices of the Supreme Court entered the Senate chamber a few minutes before the President.

On reaching the portico the President and the late President took the seats provided for them on the front of the platform, the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court on their right and the sergeant-at-arms of the Senate on their left.

The committee of arrangements occupied a position in the rear of the President and the late President.

Hayes then delivered his inaugural address. We have not the space to give it in full for the present, but copy the following abstract made by one of our exchanges.

It is enough to convince all that President Hayes is the right man at the right place.

President Hayes' inaugural address does not disappoint the expectations of the people. The promises made when he was a candidate are renewed now that he is the Chief Magistrate of the nation.

The candor with which he states the difficulties that bar the way to a quiet and satisfactory settlement, of questions exciting the attention of every citizen, and the simplicity with which he points out a practicable mode of settlement insure for the address the hearty approval of all who love their country and desire a return to universal peace.

Local self-government is assured to the South, but with the restriction that it must include a compliance with the terms of the amended Constitution. The races must be protected equally. The nation cannot permit the abuse of the weaker race, merely that local governments may prevail, and therefore he urges "the united and harmonious efforts of the races" to accomplish this result.

He extends the olive branch to the South, and if its leaders refuse to accept it in the spirit tendered, upon them alone will be the blame. The material development of the South depends upon the maintenance of law and order, and these upon an amicable and honorable settlement of political questions.

Capital sensitive to the greatest degree will not reach into Territories or States where the laws are defied and order depends upon the whim of the masses. Upon the subject of civil service reform he reiterates what he so well said in his letter of acceptance. There will be no sweeping removals. He will secure as quickly as possible a paper currency resting on a coin basis. About the conclusion of the Commission he says: "Human judgment is never inferring, and is rarely regarded as otherwise than wrong by the unsuccessful party in the contest."

But that "man one point there is entire unanimity in public sentiment, that constituting claims to the Presidency must be amicably and peaceably adjusted, and that when so adjusted the general acquiescence of the nation ought surely to follow."
