Poetry.

To Whom it may Concern.

It is not by watching and hoping.
By cloth, or by senselessly groping.
By grumbling, or sullenly moping,
That fortune can ever be won;
It is not by wishing and praying
By laziness, and by delaying.
By thoughtlessly into paths straying,
Where giddy explorers e er run.

It is not by constantly learning
On some one, through whose intervening
You hope to acquire the full meaning
Of happiness, faithfully earned—
That success will ever come near you,
With its sumles and blessings to cheer you; This truth you must get by heart, ere you The path to fortune have learned.

A lesson the wild wood can teach you,
If you will allow it to reach you;
'Twill earnestly, strongly beseech you,
To stand like the elm or the oak.
'To stand on your own footing solely,
To make each endeavor yours wholly,
If you'd rise from a place that is lowly,
And fortune's smiles ever invoke.

It is not by languidly poring
O'er marble, with thought lofty-soaring,
A vision of beauty adoring,
That genius achieves its great fame.
The seulptor is he, who beholding
The vision of beauty unfolding.
By patiently carving and moulding,
Brings honor most high to his name.

It is not by endlessly hoping.
By sighing, and weeping and moping.
By dreaming, and scheming and groping.
That fortune you ever can win;
'Tis only by thinking and doing.
By purpose defined e'er pursuing.
Your own course to prosperity hewing—
And now is the time to begin.
