EVERY man who lost a limb in the summary course, thinks that the President's policy is leading toward a fraternization between the North and the South, and toward the building up in both sections of a party which shall consist of the better elements of society. He sees in both sections the same question, "Are there good people enought to control the turbulent, the violent, and the lawiess!" He was the remonstration of silver, but is in doubt about the expense of making it a legal tender.
