Newspaper Advertising Agents

GEO. P. ROWELL & CO.,

41 PARK ROW, N. Y.

They have the satisfaction of controlling the most extensive and complete advertising connection which has ever been secured, and one which would be hardly possible to any other country but this. They have succeeded in working down a complex business into so thoroughly a systematic method that no change in the newspaper system of America can escape notice, while the widest information upon all topics interesting to advertisers is placed readily at the disposal of the public.—Extract from New York 'Times,' June 24, 1874.

Farm Accounts.

He told us about the amount of money he made by raising certain crops on piney woods lands and it astonished us. We were about to suggest that everybody ought to become a pine-woods farmer without delay. What puzzles us most was his statement to the effect that he had never made a dollar's worth of manure on his farm, and didn't intend to, owing to the fact that he found it more profitable to buy common fertilizers.

We put him through an interview. His crops had yielded him a good return, there was no mistaking that, but there was more than ought to have been told—he had not taken into account the cost of the production and of fertilizers. And that is the way too many of our farmers do it. They base their results upon what they sell their crops for without taking the costs into the least consideration.

This loose way of farming should be abandoned. A system of accounts should be adopted by which the farmer shall be able to tell at the end of the year not only the amount of his gains or losses, but just where these gains or losses, have occurred. Suppose, for instance, he first divides his farm into sections, numbering or naming his wood lots, fields, pastures, and dwelling house and lot, for convenience sake. He then estimates the value of each, fixing the same proportionate to the whole He opens an account with each one, charging to each its valuation. He also opens an account with his stock, his vehicles and tools, charging to each its value. He must, of course, keep a cash account, and charge or credit to some one of his various accounts every cent he pays out or receives.

He charges to each field expenditures for seed, manure, and labor, for share of tool account, and each day's work of himself or his oxen for planting, cultivating, and harvesting. If he sells his crop, he credits the cash received. If he stores it for family use, or to feed his animals, he charges it to family expense, or to the stock account, at whatever he could have sold it for. After the crop is cleared he estimates the value of the field, making allowance for whatever gain or loss in its condition and crop-bearing capacity many have occurred since the previous valuation, and the balance of the account show what has been made or lost from that section of his farm.

The balance of his various accounts taken in detail, show just where he has made or lost money; and if the same or similar results follow the operations of successive years, he is thereby warned, and can profit by the experience. From these accounts he can calculate, with unerring certainty, the exact cost of everything produced, including even interest, taxes and repairs of tools. He has the entire business tabularized, and can at his leisure, during the winter evening, march his columns in review before him, and study to some purpose to reduce costs and save expenses. It is the only means by which one can make sure as to what he is doing.

Sober Second Thoughts.

The eyes of other people are the ever that ruin us.

Expense of time is the most costly of all expenses.

The hen of our neighbor appears to us a goose, says the Oriental proverb.

People seldom improve when they have no other model than themselves to copy.

The man who can be nothing but serious, or nothing but merry, is but a half man.

The woman who is resolved to be respected can make herself to be so even amidst an army of soldiers.

Our natures are like oil, compound with anything, yet still we strive to swim on the top.

Nxample is more forcible than precept. People look at me six days in the week to see what I mean on the seventh.

There is this of good in real evils—they deliver us while they last from the petty despotism of all that were imaginary.

The old saying is expressed with depth and insignificance: 'On the pinnacle of fortune man does not long stand firm.'

We do not know how much a man is capable, if he has the will, and to what point he will rise if he feels free.

Who shoots at the mid-day sun, though he be sure he will never hit his mark, yet as sure is he that he shall shoot higher than he who aims at a bush.

We are nothing by being with such as ourselves. We encourage one another in mediocrity. I am always longing to be with men more excellent than myself.

God has made no one absolute. The rich depend on the poor as well as the poor on the rich. The world is but a magnificent building; all the stones are gradually cemented together. There is no one subsists by himself alone.

THORNS.—The highways of life are thickly set with thorns. Everywhere do they spring up—from numberless directions do they obtrude to trouble and wound us. The names of their hiding places is legion. An old, long disused garment—a dry and faded flower pressed and laid away—a look or tone recalling bygones—a sunset hour—a familiar scene of nature—may each awake thorny memories, to pierce us in some silent hour of retrospect. The thorns which oftenest wound, and with sharpest sting, are those we ourselves plant along the wayside of our pilgrimage—thorns we plant in carelessness, in selfishness, in pride and in passion. And we come to sharp painful contact with

COL. ROBERT INGERSOLL printed a paper in a western Sunday paper recently, in which he answered the charges of the New York Observer to the effect that Tom Paine lived a drunkard in the latter part of his life, and died a cowardly, beastly death. Perhaps it would have been better for the Observer to have suffered the remains and the memory of Paine to rest where they are—in oblivion and reproach. The good he did as a statesman, was so frightfully out-weighed by the evil he accomplished as a scoffer, that the scholars and thinkers in both the old and the new world seldom if ever refer to him. The infamy of his assault on revealed religion, and the atrocity of his aspersions of the most sublime character that ever assumed man's estate, was not palliated by anything he did for the advance of the rights of man, or the amelioration of the suffering of humanity. It matters little now, to the world whether Paine, when he lived, was a sober man or a drunkard—a courteous gentleman as 'society' goes, or a boor and a coward. We know that he trampled on the Divine character of Christ—that he sought to drag that loveliest of all objects of human observation into discredit—that he slurred His purity and questioned His inspiration. That's enough! It is a load which will prevent the grass from ever growing green and sweet on the grave of Tom Paine. The Great Napoleon once said to his secretary Montholon: 'I know men, and I tell you that Jesus Christ is not a man. The religion of Jesus Christ is a mystery, which subsists by its own force and proceed from a mind which is not a human mind. Jesus borrowed nothing from our knowledge. He exhibited Himself in the perfect example of his precepts.' How superior such an estimate of the Divine character of Christ is, in comparison to the diabolical stigma put upon him by Paine. It is not possible for us to put an estimate on what Mr. Ingersoll has written and published, in vindication of Paine, but we have a notion that the Colonel will ere long feel it more advantageous to defend ordinary criminals in the quarter sessions, than vindicate the character of the wretch who put himself on record as the deliberate scoffer at of the Divinity of Jesus Christ.—[Harrisburg Telegraph.

A PERSONAL SKETCH OF SITTING BULL.—Chief Sitting Bull is a full-blooded Teton Indian, the Teton being a branch of the great Sioux nation. In stature he is rather to be stout than tall; personally measures he will measure six feet eight or nine inches; weighs 170 pounds. His age is about eight; his hair a little gray, dark and his whole appearance of a full-blooded Sioux on the war path. He is brave, ambitious in the Indian fashion, and, in the Indian creed, fanatical. He has long had the conviction that he is one of the Indian who must wrest from whites the country of his people. He has a great and almost unmeasurable hatred toward Americans, as distinguished from Europeans or Canadians. He is even expert in dealing with those who are from the United States and who are not, and instances are not wanting in his bloody and savage career where he has shown wonderful patience and humanity, often with his own band protecting captives toward whom he took a liking or whom he regarded with so much contempt as to let free for the sake of showing the captive how little he esteemed him. Of course he is a polygamist, having three squaws in his tepee who are his wives according to the Indian code, but he has more constancy than Bear Spirit, has his brother-in-law, chief of the Yanktons and other associate chiefs. His 'private life' is described by half-breed hunters who have long been acquainted with him to be excellent according to his Indian code. His great ambition seems to be directed in a military way—to become a great soldier—and he intends even yet to carry out the Indian policy, 'America for the Sioux."

Hunting a Wild Horse.

For several months past a band of wild horses have been roaming over the plains in the vicinity of Pine Bluffs, forty miles east of here, drinking daily of the waters of Lodge Pole Creek, a fine large stream near that place. The leader of the band is a large, elegantly-proportioned, jet black stallion, with sweeping raven tail and mane, fiery eye and majestic mien.

Five days ago a party of cowboys decided to give chase to the wild monarch of the boundless plains and mounting fresh and fleet steeds set out upon his trail. They had arranged frequent changes of animals, with the view of keeping them in that immediate vicinity and securing him ont and giving him no rest.

The band of flyers was found, and then commenced the long and tedious struggle between men and to the ways of wild horses and cattle, skilled in every device for "throwing out." "rounding up" &c., an untamed rover of the plains, of subtle equine strategy, of wonderful speed and incalculable as to "bottom" and powers of endurance.

For five days and nights the chase continued. Several of the cowboys' horses have been killed in riding, but when our informant left Pine Bluffs yesterday morning the noble stallion was prancing ahead at the head of a band of tame horses, seemingly as fresh and vigorous as though he had never known fatigue. On the second day he had separated from his wild companions and has since been kept away from them.

Mr. Cole, the leader, of the pursuers, is confident that he will capture the magnificent steed, and proposes to follow him to the end. Several wild horses have been found in the vicinity during
