The editor of the Harrisburg PATRIOT, The editor of the Harrisburg Parator, in reply to a correspondent, who advocates compulsory education, say: "The invasion of the family by the inquisitorial process which any law regulating compulsory education must inevitably establish, would become odious to the extreme." Besides this, there are many achool houses in the State, unfit to place whildes and the foreign of the little inchildren, and the forcing of the little in-modests into these pens by haw would be cruel, to say the least. It is also a fact that in some districts, men who have no qualification to teach, are given schools because they will accept low wages. Others are given schools by mere favor-itiem, and still another class teach because they have nothing else to do ; hav-ing no interest whatever in the weifare of those placed in their charge. It would be a gross outrage to compel parents to send their children to such achoois.
