

Live Stock require constant watchfulness. To keep them comfortable is as important as to feed them well. No animal will thrive and fatten, if unclean and cold, hence uncomfortable and froful.

Cows have a great liking for colery, and in Austria the leaves are fed to them, cut and mixed with bran mash, and are said to produce a better quality of milk than any other feed.

To Make the Hair Stay in Crimps.—Take a little gum arabic, and add to it just enough boiling water to dissolve it. When dissolved add enough alcohol to make it rather thin. Let this stand all night, and then bottle it to put on the hair at night after it is done up in paper or pins will make it stay in crimp the hottest day, and is perfectly harmless.

Keeping Hogs Over Winter.—In answer to the question whether it is best to put early pigs into the market at nine months old or keep them over winter, an old farmer says, after fifty years' experience in hog raising, I have yet to learn there is any profit in keeping pigs over winter. Spring pigs with proper care can be made to weigh 150 to 300 pounds at ten months old, and by putting them into the market at this age the farmer gets the use of the money and runs no risk of loss from death by accident or distress.

To Remove Frost from Plants.—Plants are often treated through ignorance. Those that have been quite severely nipped may be saved if treated rightly. The proper way is, when the frost has been partially drawn out of them, naturally, to drench them with cold water from a fine nosed watering pot, and immediately cover again and let them so remain until they regain their natural color. When they are removed cut off all such parts as are blackened. As soon as it is discovered that a plant has been touched by frost, remove it to a cool, dark room, and on no account suffer the sun to strike on it. If they can be covered as to exclude air as well as light it is better still. Dandelion, canna, and the like need not be removed until the frosts are very rough to blacken the leaves.

The Scrap Book. Every farmer should keep a scrap book. Many valuable receipts, useful suggestions and beautiful thoughts are floating around in the various newspapers that may be preserved in this way for convenient reference. Magazines should not be mutilated, but bound and placed upon the library shelf year after year. News papers, however, are usually destroyed—thrown aside and forgotten but if what is either interesting or useful to you is first cut out and pasted in the scrap book, a valuable volume, containing a vast amount of miscellaneous information, is rapidly completed, and always accessible. Articles may be arranged under different departments—the scientific, the floral, the horticultural, the live stock, the ornamental, the household, the veterinary and the miscellaneous. If every article is placed under its proper heading, no index will be necessary, and you can readily turn to the article to which you wish to refer. The value of such a book must be apparent to every intelligent farmer, and its compilation a most pleasant amusement. The files of valuable animals may be saved by a reference to its pages; grain and vegetables may be cultivated more successfully or other and better varieties obtained. Useful instruction may be found in vineyard and orchard, meadow and lawn, the barnyard and poultry house. Many a pleasant evening may be passed by the water beside reading its pages, for if the selections are good, it will be an interesting and valuable encyclopedia. It is a book in which all should take an interest—the husband, the wife, and it should contain selections suited to the wants of all. Let the children have a department of their own, devote to rabbits, pheasants, canaries and other pets. You will thus in-fill into their minds a love of nature, a desire for study and methodical habits. The cost of such a book is trifling, and those who commence the compilation of one will soon be surprised at the amount of pleasure and profit afforded them. Unlike any other book in your library, this is one of your own making and you alone are responsible for its contents, like an author who writes one. It would have a value all its own as a treasure-house of information for you and children.
