

Good Beginning For 1879

While petitions innumerable are being circulated asking of Congress further, and, if possible, more effectual legislation to break up polygamy in Utah and elsewhere, and while these petitions are almost daily presented to that law-making body for the suppression of this peculiar social institution, the Supreme Court of the United States, that final arbiter of all Constitutional and legal questions, has just settled the whole subject once and for ever. The decision was so unanimous that there is no possibility of its ever being questioned or revised.

One Reynolds was sometime since indicted in the Courts of Utah for having contracted a bigamous marriage. He was tried and found guilty. He applied to the Supreme Court of the Territory, and finally to the Supreme Court of the United States. The Supreme Court of the United States recently affirmed the judgment of the lower Courts and decides that Congress had the power to pass laws prohibiting polygamy in Utah or elsewhere in the country, and that such laws are Constitutional.

The opinion in the case was long and carefully prepared, as it had to grapple with that clause of the Constitution that forbids any legislative interference with religious belief. The Court holds that the plea of religious conviction is not a valid defense for the violation of any general law for the protection of public or private morality any more than it would be for a violation of the rights of property or the security of life or liberty. It is settled, therefore, that Congress did not transgress its constitutional powers in passing laws for the suppression of polygamy in Utah. Justice Field dissented so far as related to the admissibility of certain evidence admitted in the Lower Court, but upon the main question of the constitutionality of the act of Congress, there was perfect unanimity.

This being an irrevocable settlement of the whole polygamy question, the overstocked Snyders had better commence at once ridding off their surplus stock of wives. Grand Jurors, backed by this decision, will probably hereafter do a large business in unsealing the bars of the holy Saints and bring the said Saints to judgment.

A few days ago the Supreme Court filed an opinion in regard to the wife's dower in the lands of a bankrupt, the main points of which are: A widow's right of dower commences with her marriage. It is held so sacred a right that judgment, recognition, mortgages or any other incumbrance, whatever, made by the husband after the marriage cannot, at common law, affect her right of dower; even the King's debt can not affect her. Dower is a legal, or equitable and a moral right. It is favored in a high degree by law, and next to life and liberty held sacred.

Peter Herdic, who failed for over a million dollars about a year ago, disappeared from Williamsport two weeks ago, since which time nothing has been heard of him. He has been sick for some time, and his friends say that he has gone to Florida for the benefit of his health. His sudden departure, however, causes much comment in views of his financial difficulties, and it is believed outside of his circle of friends that he left on account of a requisition from the Governor of New York for his arrest.

Recorded Quay says that he has never thought of resigning the Recordship, and that the stories afloat concerning his ambition to be Secretary of State under Governor Hoyt are without the least foundation. He is satisfied with the Recordship, and has not thought of relinquishing it for anything else. In relation to the Cabinet appointments he appeared to be ignorant, and believed that only Gov. Hoyt could enlighten the curious on that point.

DEATH is busy among the members of Congress, no less than four having died since the commencement of the present session on the 7th of last month. The latest death is that of Mr. Schleicher, of Texas, who represented the district in the south-western part of that State, composed of no less than forty-seven counties. He was one of the ablest and most influential of the Southern members. A native of Germany, he located in Texas thirty years ago, and died at the age of 55.

The Mayor of Philadelphia has undertaken to enforce in that city the law against Sunday shows. He meets with strong opposition from the Germans, who have for many years attended Sunday evening performances in their theatre. His action was excited by the Sunday opening of a low variety theatre, in which liquors were sold to the audience.

A Respite Arrives to Late-History of the Crime, etc.

MATCH CRACK, Jan. 15, '79.

On April 20th 1878 the jury in the case of Charles Sharpe, charged at Mauch Chunk with complicity in the murder of George K. Smith on November 13 1864, returned a verdict of murder in the first degree. This is the murder for which McDonnell was convicted on the 15th of April, the crime being one of the first Molly Maguire outrages recorded in Pennsylvania. The prisoners elected to be tried separately. Smith was a coal operator at Audebried, and although he was a highly respectable man, he was much disliked by the "Bucksbats," as the present "Mollie Maguire" were then called. As a body they resisted the draft, and it is supposed that Smith's only offence was pointing out to the officers of the government individuals who had so resisted. On the night of the murder about eight o'clock, three men with blackened faces, and wearing the garb of miners, presented themselves at Smith's door and insisted upon an interview with him, saying they had a letter from the superintendent of the Lehigh Valley Railroad, Mr. Smith being sick in bed, Mrs. Smith refused to permit them to go up stairs, when one of them fired a pistol. A crowd of men who had been lurking outside burst open the door immediately and poured into the house, wounding a Mr. Ulrich, one of the inmates, and knocking Mrs. Smith down. Smith, who was known to be a fearless man, left his bed and came down stairs to defend his home, but he was soon surrounded. Some one put a pistol to the back of his head and fired, and Smith fell dead. The "Bucksbats" then fled. Not one of them was arrested, nor were they ever suspected until the disclosures brought about by the trials since 1875, and it was not until fourteen years after the murder that these two men were arrested. They were tried at Mauch Chunk last April, and yesterday these two persons expiated their crime on the gallows. Great exertions were made to obtain a reprieve from the Governor, so as to have their case reviewed by a higher court.

The condemned men slept quietly Monday night. McDonnell left orders upon retiring to be called at midnight for prayer. At that hour Sharpe was fast asleep. Neither of them ate any breakfast. The two priests, Fathers Bruce and Hainan, arrived about seven o'clock, and mass was said in McDonnell's cell in the presence of a number of relatives of the doomed men. At half-past nine the doors of the prison were open to those who had prayers, and the corridors were soon well filled with a mixed crowd. It was a serious time, and the Sheriff gave strict order to his assistants to allow no levity on the part of the crowd. At 10:25 the Sheriff knocked on the doors of the cells as a signal that he was ready.

The condemned men did not appear for some time, but when they did they did not show the least fear. The prisoners, the priests, policemen and the Sheriff went upon the Scaffold. After a short service the Sheriff said, "James McDonnell, have you anything to say before I proceed further?" McDonnell replied, speaking in a firm voice, "I am innocent of the murder of Smith as the child unborn. I have already told the only crime I was engaged in"—referring to the Burns murder from the Holy Catholic Church. "I forgive everybody."

In reply to the Sheriff's question, Sharpe said he was innocent of the murder of Smith. He said he had intended to have read a statement written for him by Mr. Boyle, of the Coal Gazette, but he would not ask that gentleman to be sure to publish it. The men then were shackled, and the priests kissed them goodby.

Every effort was made by the counsel of the doomed men to save them from the gallows. Monday night they endeavored to persuade the Governor to grant a respite to the condemned men, to enable them to make application to the Supreme Court for a special writ of error. The Governor said he would let them know in the morning what action he would take. He did, but it was too late. When the reprieve arrived at Mauch Chunk the execution had taken place—the men were dangling at the end of the gallows in the agonies of death. The Governor's message granted a respite until Monday next, but the law had taken its course.

I take pleasure in certifying that the Sweet Worm Powder has worked wonders in my family. My girl, four years old, was taken with convulsion, rolling up the eyes, and straightening out of the limbs, and seemed to be almost lifeless, when I borrowed some of the Sweet Worm Powder made by E.
